MR. PATTULLO'S SPEECH

Last week in closing the debate on the budget Premier T. D. Pattullo emphasized that there must be a new deal for the province from Ottawa and that, as soon as the policy of the federal government towards the province was changed, the provincial government would be in a position to relieve the municipalities of some of their burden.

While disclaiming that he was suggesting secession, the Premier was very emphatic in regard to the position of British Columbia. He said:

"So far as this province is concerned, it cannot continue under a policy which, through tariff and freight rates, strangles its economic welfare, nor can we permit unchallenged the invasion of provincial sources of revenue and there must be a redefinition of authority in respect to revenue resources."

Mr. Pattullo also refers to the fact that, while this province would like to do many things, the provincial government, is not a sovereign power, in that its acts are liable to be vetoed by the Dominion government. If it had been a sovereign power with the customs and other revenues which would come to it as such there would have been no difficulty in financing. He was still urging the use of the national credit to provide work and wages for the unemployed and the taking over of the P. G. E. by the federal government.

THE REAL MEANING

When this session is over it is intimated at Victoria that there will be a battle royal with Ottawa over the treatment accorded to British Columbia as one of the links in Confederation. Mr. Pattullo did not say so in his speech and neither has he said so elsewhere that we know of, but it seems to be generally understood that British Columbia's case will be placed before the federal administration with more force than ever. In his speech the Premier hinted that the Special Powers Act may have to be renewed for another year and it is understood that nothing but victory will be accepted by the British Columbia government. In the meantime plans are being laid for relieving the province of some of its burden through a big conversion scheme. If two million dollars a year can be saved in that way the money may be used to relieve the municipalities.

PLANS FOR BILLIARDS

Play to Start Next Week in City Individual Competition

Arrangements for the city individual billiard championship competition to be held under the auspices of the Canadian Legion were perfected last night at a meeting of the committee consisting of Jack Preece, chairman, J. S. Wilson, secretary, George Cripps, manager, Jack Allen, official referee and marker, and C. L. Youngman, scorer.

Entries, of which there are already seven in, will close next Tuesday after which the draw for the first round will be immediately made in the presence of all entrants and dates set for the playing of the matches. It is planned to start play next week.

The games will be played at the Canadian Legion billiard room where special arrangements are being made for the accommodation of spectators. Matches of the opening rounds will be to 1000 points each in two blocks of 500. The final will be to 1500 points in three blocks of 500.

The Canadian Legion is putting up a handsome cup for the championship, the trophy to become the property outright of the first man to win it three times. There will be a miniature cup for each year's winner. An engraved billiard cue will be presented to the player making the highest break.

City Billiard Championship

CHOOSING VOCATION

Member of Rotary Club Gives Interesting Address on Subject At This Week's Luncheon

The value of vocational training was stressed yesterday afternoon by Lee Gordon in an address to the Prince Rupert Rotary Club and a number of visitors at the regular weekly luncheon in the Commodore Cafe. The speaker suggested that a great many people went through life with their most important faculties unused and their lesser abilities overworked, making a poor living for themselves.

Most young people could not be depended on to choose their own vocations. For instance, George Washington wanted to be a sailor and the ambition of Benjamin Franklin was to kill Indians. The world was full of misfits, discontented, unhappy men and women who were in places to which they did not belong. The speaker contended that, in these days, vocational guidance was a necessity for, without it, two out of three people found themselves in work which did not suit them.

Mr. Gordon then went on to tell of a small town with a service club where the members banded themselves together to help the young men and boys find their proper vocation. With the aid of the education department in Washington an analysis was made of the tendencies and tastes of the boys with very beneficial results. Twenty boys were examined and in that twenty it was found that almost all the trades and professions were represented. The outcome was that most of these boys found their proper vocations in life and were successful men, not wealthy perhaps, but happy.

Some of the boys, it was found, were "handminded." They were suited to some trade or pursuit in which deep study was not required and yet they were, perhaps, equally as successful in their way as the others.

At the conclusion of the address Mr. Gordon received the thanks of the club through the president, J. J. Little, and many of the members took occasion after the gathering broke up to express their personal appreciation of the efforts of the speaker.
