THE VIMY PILGRIMAGE

The Daily News has given a great deal of space at different times to the various accounts of the pilgrimage to Vimy and the reason for this can perhaps best be explained in the words of Norman Watt in addressing the Rotary Club yesterday, when he said:

"The unveiling of this memorial can hardly be regarded in the light of the mere unveiling of a war memorial—rather must it be interpreted as a gesture of vital importance and significance to the British Empire. It was the first time in the history of England that the King had set foot in a foreign country—not as King of England but as King of one of the Dominions which make up the British Empire. Indeed, the ceremony was almost as much a consecration of the bond of unity which exists between Britain and Canada—two separate and distinct countries joined indivisibly by their devotion to one head—as it was a consecration of the war memorial."

STILL WATCHING ABERHART

People of Canada still have their eyes on Premier Aberhart, the man who is making radical changes in the social setup of the province of Alberta and are wondering what he is going to do next and how he will do it.

It is easy to scoff at Aberhart. Thousands are doing it but the people of Alberta are not scoffing. The very fact that Colonel Woods, head of the Southam newspaper chain in that province, is seriously impressed is an indication that something important is going on there. The Vancouver Province also sees visions in regard to the Alberta movement for it has sent a special writer to the province to tell of what is going on there. This same man will also probably report to the other newspapers of the chain. That means that the Province is treating the Aberhart movement seriously, which, considering the way it treated Pattullo, is saying a good deal for the Province.

We suggest to readers of this paper that they cease their jeering. At any rate Aberhart is trying to do something, while the jeerers are sitting pat and hoping that problems will solve themselves. The Alberta movement may prove a fizzle, but nearly all reformers in all lines of life have been jeered at or possibly spit upon. Aberhart may be worth watching and if he is successful he will be worth copying. If he succeeds, the jeerers will be saying they always knew there was something to the Alberta leader.

Perhaps the misty shadow of jovial Sir Thomas Lipton (top) smiled down on the little harbor of Gosport, England as, gaily bedecked with flags and bunting and cheered by a large gathering of well-wishers, the new yacht Endeavor II slid into the waves. Endeavor is the craft with which T. O. M. Sopwith, British aviaton tycoon, will try again to wrest the America's Cup, blue ribbon of Atlantic yachting from its resting place in the New York Yacht Club. Sopwith, the smiling sailor at the right, saw his first Endeavor fail, just as a long line of Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrocks failed, but like the famous Irish baronet Sopwith did not give up. Endeavor II will carry Sopwith's new challenge for the "old mug" next year.

Proving Haggis Sure Scot Dish

But Writer Willing to Admit Germans and Turks May Have Adopted It

LONDON, Sept. 24: (CP)—"I see that a Turk who visited the display of Scottish foodstuffs now being given at British Industries House in London claimed that the haggis came from his country," says a letter to The Spectator. "All Scots will be glad to learn that so terrible a heresy has been promptly quashed."

"But while haggis is native to Scotland in origin and material, I should like to point out that, during my wanderings in Europe, I have found it honored and sung a long way from home. Once I was dining in a beer garden in Remscheid, Germany, when to my surprise a German family sitting nearby was served with haggis. There was no doubt about it; there was the familiar paunch stuffed with its famous mixture of liver, onions, oatmeal and spices. A group of students, on seeing the dish, broke into an impromptu chorus of praise. Quite plainly its virtues were no novelty at Heri Lembeke's schottische menage."
