Commonplace Subject Treated In Interesting Way by Dr. Brocklesby in Gyro Club Talk

More romance can be found around the seemingly simple contents of an ordinary salt cellar a lifetime. The common substance which would occupy more than the entire lifetime of a student or scientist. So declared Dr. H. N. Brocklesby of the scientific staff of the Prince Rupert Fisheries Experimental Station in an ad- o'clock this morning and, after J. Jabour was in the chair in the absence from the city of the president, Dr. R. G. Larage, on an angling expedition.

Salt had not always been as abundant and cheap as it is today, southbound from Alaska. Dr. Brocklesby declared. It was required to maintain all life and the struggle for its possession had | narked all history. It had been the cause of wars and revolutions.
