What the people wanted today Dr. Patterson thought, was common sense tak about methods of government. They did not want to be trifled with by talk of Utopias and getting something for nothing How were all private holdings going to be transferred? Would there be compensation or would there be confiscation. The former would be impossible and the latter intolerable. Where were to be found the giants of business and industry who would take chareg? Dr. Telford had even refused to turn over his "Plenty For All" campaign to the C.C.F executive because he said it was a business enterprise and had to be carried on along business lines. But he would turn over the entire business of the province to the same executive. Did a change of ownerchip, after all, ever add one man to the payroll or increose human consumption by one dollar- In other countries prosperity had been brought back without a change of system. Australia was an example. The C.C. F. was a negligible factor in every part of Canada except British Columbia and the speaker believed it would disappear here due to internal de-

Turns to Pattullo

Dr. Patterson then turned his attention to the Pattullo government which he accused of broken promises, unfulfilled pledges, weakness and autocratic control. A government, he felt, should be honest, courageous and sincere "Work and Wages," the Conservative leader believed, had been but a scheme to catch votes. Mr. Pattullo had no plan, he declared At first he blamed the Bennett federal government. Now he blamed the King government. But Mr. Pattullo had suggested that, failing federal aid, British Columbia could and would "go it alone" utilizing the resources of the province to provide food, shelter and fair work and wages for all. The speaker did not believe in making promises to raise false hopes in the breasts of the people. He would never stoop to bribe the electorate in this way.
