New Jewish City in Palestine

There are today very close to half a million Jews in Palestine. It is claimed by the Arabs, who outnumber them considerably, that the Jews buy the land from the Arabs and sit down and get the money back. The new book "No Place Like Home" by Beverley Nichols describes in an interesting manner the largest Jewish city in Nelson Allen and Japanese Palestine, "Tel Aviv." It had, when the book was publish- teams played to a 16-all draw last student squad shared in their ed a few months ago, a population of over 100,000 people, night in the City Table Tennis ninety-nine percent of whom were Jews. Ten years ago League fixture. the place was unknown. At the end of 1934 the population was given as 46,101. The city has its own opera house was given as 46,101. The city has its own opera house where the world's greatest Jewish artists constantly perform and its businessmen are preparing for an industrial exhibition which will draw manakants from all and the exhibition which will draw merchants from all over the east. The road from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv is so crowded with omnibuses that "cutting in becomes increasingly dangerous."

According to the same authority the country around ten-tube electric radio. Perfect time, E. Dickens took a throw-in Tel Aviv is extremely rocky and infertile. Three-room groups, one-sided affair, with the Scythex-clerks, ex-doctors, ex-shopkeepers swarmed like ants, staggering under the weight of the stones they were removing, panting as they wielded their spades. Already they had tamed a whole hillside, had planted orchards of fruit and vine. They had established dairies and had greatly improved the breed of cows, not by reading them passages of Karl Marx, but by the most orthodox me-

Telling of his arrival in the city, Mr. Nichols says: "You turn a corner and are at the entrance to a long, noisy street. At first you cannot see it very clearly, because it is always half hidden in dust. This dust comes from the FOR RENT-Four-room countless new houses which are being built in every direction. And out of the dust comes a din of knocking and rivetting and hammering. But as soon as you get more acclimatized to this bedlam, you notice that the main street looks strangely like that of a prosperous town in the middle west of America. You motor down it, very slowly, WANTED-Leather Baby carriage. because the traffic is phenomenal and the pavements are so crowded that the people overflow on to the roads. Where are the Arabs? Where are the little donkeys? Where are the little bazaars? You might as well ask the GENTLEMEN'S Sanitary Supplies, same question in Whitechapel or the Bowery. Instead you highest grade 15 for $1. The author says he said to himself: "What on earth would Hitler do if he suddenly found himself dumped down here?"
