The Other Fellow's Side

In the Bridge River and Cariboo mining district wages and working conditions are so good that the employees have no complaint against the employers. There are no strikes and no talk of strikes. Indeed, at some of the mines there is competition to get the jobs. Having no quarrel with their employers, the miners have been having little disputes among themselves as to the question of affiliating with the American Federation of Labor.

Of course, the reason that the employers in that district are paying good wages and making conditions so good for their men is that they themselves are making good. Their operations are proving profitable and they are ready and willing to share those profits with the employees in the way of decent wages and good camps. Consequently, everybody is happy.

Possibly in many cases where comparatively low wages are paid and working conditions are not so good it is because the employers are not making a reasonable margin themselves and are compelled to keep their costs down to keep their enterprises going at all. It is not likely that many employers deliberately cut on their employees to make good profits better. Sometimes, possibly, when strikes are talked about and workers seem discontented, the position of the employer is not sufficiently considered. He, too, may be having a hard and discouraging time.

We do not suggest that improvements to the present economic set-up are not needed but we are inclined to believe that the employer's side of the case may often be more or less disregarded amid the volubility and complaint of the employees who are finding it hard to piece out their incomes.

If the mass of Canadian employers were having as easy a time as are the operators of some of the Bridge River and Cariboo district mines, they would probably be as willing as they would be able to provide happy conditions for their employees and the complaints and strife as between bosses and workers would generally disappear.

If the employers and the employees could get together and strive towards making business better by co-operating one with the other instead of viewing each other with prejudice and distrust, something concrete might be done in making conditions more liveable all around.

What is needed is an attitude of live and let live instead of a bitter feeling that one side must be killed off so that the other may survive. The unfortunate thing is that many of us, in thinking of the problems which face us individually and collectively, consciously or unconsciously, do not give the other fellow a break.

Too often the man who may be blessed with a comfortable measure of the world's goods can only think that the poor man is just looking for an opportunity to take it away from him. Too often the poor man thinks that the man who is rich in influence or material things could only have got his wealth as a result of unfairness or dishonesty. This, it seems to us, is not the proper attitude. It is the attitude which makes fanatics and despots rather than benefactors and helpers.

KEELING TURFMAN

Puck Player Figuring His Prospects for Rainy Day in Hockey Career

TORONTO, Oct. 27: (CP) — Butch Keeling, hard-shooting left-winger of New York Rangers, may have only a couple of more years of big-time hockey in his system. "I'll be lucky if I stay up that long," he says—but chances are you'll see his name decorating the sports pages for many years. Butch has settled down to make a living for life out of sport.

On the ice he's an exceptionally fast skater, fearless and occasionally rough, anyway rough enough that the league's more notorious bad boys leave him strictly alone. During the years Keeling has accomplished some noted pinch-hitting for Lester Patrick's Rangers.

Perhaps the highlight of his career was in the fourth game of the 1933 Stanley Cup finals in Toronto. The game was in overtime, two Maple Leafs were penalized in succession. As the Rangers moved up on the attack, the puck came to Butch who sidestepped a checker and slipped a neat pass to Bill Cook. The series-winning goal flashed from Cook's stick.

The other Butch Keeling, the dapper, youthful-looking big fellow who owns a string of race horses, is a familiar figure on Canadian tracks. He's been watching his steeds go to town for several years.

More in Racing

"It seems funny, doesn't it," he remarked the other day, just before leaving for the Winnipeg training camp of the Rangers, "but I've made more money in the last few years out of racing than from hockey? I've been lucky, I guess, but it's been great fun and I'm going to keep at it."

Butch, 31 years old, is the proud owner of six racers just now. He estimated 25 have passed through his hands since he became interested in the sport seven years ago.

"I have six today," Butch said, "but I might have three or four tomorrow, then again I might have seven or eight. That's the way it goes."

His interest in racing came through his father's association in the trotting game in Owen Sound, Ont., and through his wife, whose parents were horse owners in England for years. His pretty, auburn-haired wife is, outwardly at least, more interested in his string of horses than Butch.

"I didn't know a thing about horse racing when I first started," he said, "and I give all the credit for whatever success I've had to my trainer, C. S. Mitchell. "Circlet was the first horse I bought and perhaps that's why he is my favorite. That was seven years ago and the gelding gave me my first trophy by winning the Mount Royal Handicap easily in 1932."

"I've had a swell time and a lot of success. I was eighth leading money winner in Canada last year although we haven't been doing so well this year."

When his hockey-playing days are over Keeling, unlike so many big-league performers who take up managerial or coaching positions in the ice game, isn't going to do that.

"I'll devote my time to racing," he said, "either as an owner or in some other capacity."

SPORT CHAT

Ching Johnson, one of the "originals" of Lester Patrick's New York Rangers in the National Hockey League, is through as a regular defense man with the Gothamites but will be used in the "pinches" this season if he accepts Patrick's terms. In announcing that all regular Ranger players have signed contracts three weeks before the squad faces the 1936-37 barrier, Manager Patrick said he no longer considers Johnson a regular. "It is a question whether or not Johnson will hang up his skates and call quits to hockey or accept Rangers' proposition to make him a lieutenant in the organization," Patrick said.

Johnson's contract would make him one of Patrick's righthand men, in a similar capacity to that held by Bill Cook, veteran right-winger and another original Ranger. Johnson would be called for playing duty only in certain spots and would coach and direct defencemen, acting also in an advisory capacity. Johnson was "very doubtful" if he would hang up his skates, but tentatively rejected Patrick's offer. "There's not much ice in New York and if you don't get in all forty-eight games it's hard to keep in shape," he said.
