As King Edward Honored Canada's War Dead

Ceremonies last many hours, but each one has a fleeting few seconds in which a single action or a few words epitomize all the symbolism and richness of the occasion. Such a moment is this. King Edward, on the speaker's platform at Vimy Ridge, has pulled the cord. It dangles in the air like a strand of a woman's hair. The flag of Great Britain unfolds from the heroic memorial to Canada's war dead, on the site of one of the most memorable battles of the World War. France, after the war, deeded the hallowed ground to the Canadian government. This moment climaxed the pilgrimage of thousands of Canadian veterans who travelled to France to honor their dead comrades.

SPECIMENS OF MARINE LIFE HERE

Moonfish and Turnate Brought In by Halibut Boats—Identified At Fisheries Station

Two strange marine creatures caught in waters of this district were recently brought to the Prince Rupert Fisheries Experimental Station for identification.

The halibut boat Melville, Capt. John Ivarson, brought in at the week-end a fish which took bait in 130 fathoms of waters north of Langara Island. It was an unusual and exotic specimen which was identified by Dr. A. L. Pritchard of the Nanaimo Biological Station, who was in the city, as a moonfish or opah. The moonfish is brilliantly colored with silvery to purplish scales and vivid vermillion fins. This specimen was 27 inches long and 15 inches wide, weighing 23 pounds. The usual habitat is in southern Atlantic and Pacific waters. Two were caught near Nanaimo early this year but the one brought here by Capt. Ivarson is the furthest north ever recorded.

On Friday last Capt. Clarence Campbell of the Joe Baker brought in a peculiar object about five inches long and resembling a cob of corn which was snagged during halibut fishing at a depth of 130 fathoms 25 miles off Rose Spit buoy. It was identified as a representative of the turnicates, a form of marine animal life which, although simple in appearance, is one of the highest forms below the fishes since it has the rudiments of a spinal cord.
