The speaker said the people generally were very religious, mostly Roman Catholics. On Sundays they all dressed in their best and, decorated with wonderful Dutch gold way to Australia, will stay over for jewelery, went to church. In Zeeland the length of lace on the women's hat told whether she was atholic or Protestant and the way the rim of the man's hat was turned indicated the same thing. If turned up, the man was a Protestant and, if down, a Catholic.

In Marken the people stick to For the East the old customs more than at any other part of the country. Mothers tie cloths around the heads of their babies which give them peculiar shape and no efforts of the doctors have yet been able to eliminate the custom. The boys and the girls are dressed alike in girls' clothes until seven years of age when the boys are given men's costumes.
