Unemployment in B. C.

The movement toward solving the unemployment problem in British Columbia has not been rapid. Under conditions that presented themselves it could not be otherwise. However, good progress is being made. The chief difficulty seems to be in the influx of unemployed from other provinces keeping the labor market flooded. The minister of finance in his budget speech last week spoke as follows:

"The consideration of the transient unemployed together with our own, still constitutes a major problem. It is one that unquestionably calls for the utmost co-operation from the federal authorities if this province is to arrive at its ultimate goal, namely, the absorption of its own unemployed into private industry. That the transient unemployed aggravate our own problem is emphasized by the figures provided by the relief department, which show that officials have dealt with 14,709 transient single men since August 1934, and have given relief to 2,500 transient families during the same period.

"The figures of the department of labor also give some conception of the recovery which has taken place. Based on returns from slightly more than 4,000 firms, officials report that from January 1933 to December 1935, there has been an increase of 20,075 in the number of those employed in industry and in private business.

"While considering the matter of employment, it should be pointed out that in this province the payrolls have advanced from $99,126,653 in 1933 to $125,812,140 in 1935, an increase of $26,696,000 during the period of this administration.

"Gratifying as the results have been in the immediate past, I am convinced that the future holds still greater promise. Firm in this belief, Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by saying:

"Let us have confidence in our ability to solve our problems. Let us take hope from the progress of the past three years. Let us turn a deaf ear to monetary nostrums, and remember that only by economy and industry can we bring about that prosperity which should be ours by virtue of our vast resources."
