Proclamation of Coronation Date

This scene was snapped at Temple Bar, London, a few days ago, when Bluemantle pursuivant demanded entrance to the city to read the formal proclamation of he date of the coronation of King Edward VIII. Medieval pomp and pageantry marked the rites in several sections of London, when the formal reading of the proclamation, apprising the city that May 12, 1937, will be the coronation date, was performed by men of the King's household. Troops lined the route through which the gaily caparisoned heralds, pursuivants and men-at-arms, rode on their steeds, and in open carriages, to read the proclamation.
