HORROR OF HALIFAX HOLOCAUST REMAINS IN SPITE OF YEARS

Disaster That Wrecked City and Took Toll of 1,600 Lives Gave America First Blast of Modern Warfare

HALIFAX, Dec. 10: (CP)—Halifax still bears the ugly scars of the world's greatest explosion, that holocaust of horror in December 19 years ago, which took 1,600 lives, when buildings shivered, tottered and fell in crumbling ruins—when terrifying modern warfare came to America for the first time. A new city has arisen on the ashes of the old, new schools, new factories, new homes, have replaced those which fell like paper structures when the munition-laden French ship Mont Blanc collided with the Belgian Relief steamer Imo to wreak destruction. But no monument has been erected to those who died—no memorial has been built to the heroes of the Halifax Explosion. Gaps in the family circle, sons and daughters maimed by the terrific blast, are too vivid a reminder of the disaster, perhaps.

I remember well, December 6, 1917. It was a crisp, clear day, and like thousands of other children, I was packed off to school. Just when school was about to begin, a fire alarm sent engines roaring to the north end of the city. Some kiddies followed them and ran to their doom. Two ships on fire in the harbor, what a pretty sight! Some children crowded out on wharfs unknowing war directors were about to "waste" valuable T.N.T. intended for a program of death and destruction on foreign soil. They were moths flitting about a powder-fuse.

Minutes ticked. There seemed to be a silence while the God Mars held his breath. Then the blast of horror burst in all its fury. The heavens fell down on us. I ran towards the school building, but it seemed to be capsizing. Broken glass fell like rain. A million guns were firing simultaneously. The ground shook, I turned and ran towards the open field when I feared the building would topple over. Then I fell, face downwards. The next sound was that of crying children, their faces and hands cut, streaming from the building. I started to run home. On my way I passed hundreds of people cut and injured. It was a ghastly sight, one I shall never forget. One woman, led by another, held her hands to her face, blood gushed from between her fingers. A little boy was being carried on the back of another. One of his eyes was gone. He was too stunned to cry.

Overhead a giant billow of smoke almost covered the blue of the sky. Our first thought was the long anticipated zeppelin raid had come. As children we had been warned to draw the shades at night. Automobile and tram-lights were blackened at the top and our constant fear was the air-raiding Hun.

I arrived home at last and found every room was crowded with injured persons and my father, a doctor, working feverishly to bandage wounds. There was hardly a pane of glass left in the house. Two rooms were made into one when a partition fell through. Glass darts remained in the walls for many months after the explosion. And the house was located nearly two miles from where the two ships collided!

Flee For Your Lives

Then came the call from the soldiers. "Flee! Flee, for your lives! There is going to be another explosion!"

Men and women in wheel chairs, some carried on stretchers, others in beds, babies in arms, were taken to open fields. The Halifax Commons massed the unfortunate. No war-torn city of Belgium could muster a worse spectacle. There was fear written on their faces—but there was no panic. These were the hours that developed nameless heroes.

Found to be a false alarm, we returned to our homes. Windows were boarded up. There was a glow of light in the north as homes continued to burn and soldiers searched for bodies all through the night. The next day a blinding blizzard raged. Corpses were laid out in the Chebucto Road school, and for days fathers, mothers, son and daughters searched for the missing members of their families.

No, Halifax needs no memorial to remind her of that great catastrophe.

There were many instances of heroism, and hundreds untold. A train despatcher at the North End Station ticked out: "Boys, an ammunition ship is on fire. Watch out for the explosion. Good-bye. He gave his life to save an incoming express a few miles from the city.

A second explosion did not occur because of the 72nd battalion of Ottawa. Every man volunteered to remain at his post to flood the magazine at Wellington barracks.

A corporal seized an axe and broke the burning door of the powder magazine.

The commander of the cruiser Highflyer, killed in his attempt to aid the Mont Blanc, was awarded, posthumously, the Albert medal.

Sufferer Follows Good Advice—And Takes Kruschen

The writer of the following letter had a bad attack of rheumatism, and was advised to take Kruschen. He did so, and describes his experiences in the following words:—

"About two years ago I developed a severe attack of rheumatism in my left shoulder blade. I tried all sorts of remedies, but with no results, until one day my brother-in-law, on hearing of my suffering, exclaimed, 'There is only one thing for rheumatism! That is—Kruschen Salts!' I decided to purchase a bottle, and for the first week took a teaspoonful in a glass of hot water each morning. The pain gradually disappeared and has now gone entirely. I am still taking my early morning dose, as I feel convinced that it is helping to keep me fit."—J.G.B.

Rheumatic conditions are frequently the result of an excess of uric acid in the body. Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts are notable for their work in dissolving uric acid. Other ingredients of these Salts assist Nature to expel the dissolved acid from the system.

The Dockyards called doctors, nurses, until she was carried from the building.

The munition ship Picton, lying near the Mont Blanc, was saved because of the heroism of 64 longshoremen. They battered down the hatches and prevented the ship from being blown up but they were taken out—corpses.
