a rowboat manned by two men with one additional to handle a machine gun, and they could take the whole coast. I am surprised that an hon, member from a province such as Ontario, one supposed to uphold all British traditions, one of the pioneer districts, should question any expenditure in the part of the country about which I am speaking. We are trying to convey to the committe that we form part of the Dominion and that we hold a strategic position within it. I am surprised to hear any hon, member ask about our population about our traditions or our possibilities. I remember an occasion two years ago when in opposition tried to suggest that in my section of the country we have room for hundreds of thousands of families Upon that occasion one hon, member on the government side of the house said, "Where are you going to put your houses? On the sides! of hills?" I would ask the hon member for Parkdale to visit that part of Canada and see for himself that we do not have to put our houses on the sides of hills.

Mr. Spence: I have been there. Mr. Hanson: There are four hnudred miles east and west where one cannot see a mountain; there are seven hundred miles north and south where one cannot see a mountain.

Mr. Spence: Or anything else. Better Take Trip

Mr. Hanson: Consequently it is not necessary to put houses on the sides of hills. I notice the former Minister of National Defence the hon: member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) is looking at me; he knows something about the matter.
