Association. John Evans, a former Progressive member of parliament for Saskatoon and Rosetown, said the futility of increasing the cost of living ought to be apparent.' The sales and income taxes, he said, put the burden on people east able to pay.

Aldermen in towns and cities of the province discussed the tax proposals extensively. Mayor Ellison of Regina said the taxation proposals would cause great hardships for the cities. Relief recipients, Mayor Ellison contended, could not afford to pay the sales tax.

The government issued a statement after the report had been made public reviewing the whole situation. The commission, appointed to review the whole problem of taxation, had made its recommendations and the government statement pointed out that "any suggestions having to do with taxation are not very popular." If requests for increased expenditures by the government were to be met, then the only way to obtain the money was by taxation, it pointed out.
