WAS GREAT STATESMAN

Sir Austen Chamberlain's Sense Of Duty Thwarted His Ambition

Thwarted twice in attaining the ambition of his political career—leadership of the Conservative party in England—the late Sir J. Austen Chamberlain rose to greater heights of glory and honor as Foreign Secretary in the second government of Stanley Baldwin in which capacity he negotiated the Locarno Pact. It was generally conceded that Sir Austen could have been Premier had he not relegated personal ambition to duty.

Of all the statesmen who devoted themselves to European peace after the World War, Chamberlain evolved the plan regarded as providing the greatest degree of security and which eventually brought into being the Locarno treaties.

His plan was a sequence of a security effort by the Assembly of the League of Nations, which became known as the Geneva protocol. This was discarded when it was rejected by Great Britain on the ground that, because of the extent of the British Empire, it would be unable to fulfill the guarantees of security imposed upon it by the protocol.

On March 24, 1925, Mr. Chamberlain informed the British Parliament that Great Britain would have nothing further to do with the wreckage of the Geneva protocol. Instead, it would seek to build permanent peace for Europe on another foundation—a mutual pact between Germany and her former enemies — which would guarantee the frontier of Western Europe against change and in which Germany would renounce all idea of ever going to war to bring about alterations in her eastern borders as they were fixed after the war.

The British Foreign Secretary entered into negotiations with Aristide Briand and Dr. Gustav Stresemann, foreign ministers respectively of France and Germany. In them he found sympathetic proponents of his plan. The Locarno conference then assembled and adopted the treaties. In one of them Germany, France and Belgium agreed never to wage war upon each other, Great Britain and Italy signing as guarantors of the treaty. Others involving Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia were signed to guarantee peace on the eastern border.

In outlining his plans, Mr. Chamberlain also provided for the election of Germany to membership in the League of Nations.

Rewarded For Locarno

For his achievement in promoting the Locarno conference he was honored by King George V with knighthood in the Order of the Garter and with Charles G. Dawes, vice-president of the United States, shared the Nobel Peace Prize for 1925.

The Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph Austen Chamberlain was born October 16, 1863, at Birmingham. He was the eldest son of Joseph Chamberlain, one of the noted British statesmen of his time, and Harriet Kenrick Chamberlain. In 1906 he married Ivy Muriel Dundas, daughter of Colonel Henry Lawrence Dundas. They had two sons and a daughter.

Educated at Rugby School and Trinity College, Cambridge, Sir Austen later received honorary degrees from Oxford, Birmingham, Sheffield and Glasgow and was elected lord rector of the last named university in 1925.

He began his political career in 1892 as Member of Parliament for the constituency of East Worcestershire, which he represented until 1914. Then upon his father's death he was elected to his seat from the West Birmingham district.

After a short apprenticeship as a private member he was made a civil lord of the Admiralty, serving from 1895 to 1900, then for two years as financial secretary of the treasury. A short term as postmaster general was followed by appointment as chancellor of the exchequer, which post he filled from 1903 to 1906.

He was chairman of the Royal Commission on Indian finance and currency in 1913 and secretary of state for India from 1915 to 1917; member of the war cabinet in 1918; again chancellor of the exchequer from 1919 to 1921, and lord of the privy seal and leader of the Conservatives in the House of Commons, 1921-1922.

Easter Telegrams Proving Popular

Special Provision Being Made To Handle Business This Year

TORONTO, March 18: — The early arrival of spring this year is definitely indicated by the large number of pre-Easter telegraph orders being handled by both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Telegraphs. Both telegraph companies have made preparations to handle the largest Easter file in the history of the Canadian telegraph because of the many enquiries received at their offices relative to the forwarding of greeting telegrams and cablegrams.

In addition to Easter greetings by telegraph and cable, it is expected that a large volume of flowers by wire to all parts of the world will herald the opening of the spring season.

The two Canadian telegraph companies are offering reduced rates for Easter greeting cables to the United Kingdom and countries in Europe, South America, the West Indies and Siberia, in fifteen different languages. These text messages are available to the public between the dates of March 22 and 29 inclusive and may be sent from all telegraph offices in Canada. The attractively decorated blanks and envelopes provided for this and other special occasion services are in use by the Canadian and United States telegraph companies. The popularity of these colorful blanks has resulted in substantial public demand for the service.

Don't let Constipation get you down

"WATCH YOUR STEP" THE BOSS TOLD ME

1 "This last mistake cost the company $87," he growled, "what's happened to you lately?" There certainly was something wrong with me. Headaches half the time. And no real energy.

2 "The boss told me flatly that another big mistake would cost me my job. He said I lacked interest in my work. But what I really lacked was the pep to keep up the pace."

3 Bill Jones, at the next desk, is a good friend of mine. I told him my troubles. "Dan, old kid," he said, "I think I know what's got you down. You're not keeping regular. Result is, you're half-dead all the time. Try taking All-Bran."

4 "Funny what a difference a few weeks make. I certainly feel better since I started taking Kellogg's All-Bran. Head's clearer, work seems to go through smoother. The Boss is friendlier too. Bill certainly had the right dope."

● Constipation dulls working hours, undermines energy and ambition. You feel tired all the time.

The brainiest man in the world just can't succeed if poisons due to accumulated waste in his system slowly and steadily dull his brain, sap his energy, and pull him down below par physically.

Doctors will tell you that common constipation is due largely to lack of "bulk" in your diet. Kellogg developed All-Bran to put that necessary fibre back into your diet.

Tests prove that All-Bran absorbs at least twice its weight in water, supplies the soft bulk necessary, and acts like a sponge in gently cleansing out the system. It also supplies vitamin B to tone up the intestines, as well as iron for the blood.

It's such a simple and easy method to follow too. Just eat two tablespoonfuls of All-Bran daily—either as a cereal with milk or cream—in tasty muffins—or sprinkled on some other cereal.

All-Bran is sold by all grocers. Made and guaranteed by Kellogg in London.

Serve Kellogg's ALL-BRAN regularly for regularity
