CURIOUS CHANGE

When war broke out in 1914 between Germany and the allies, Italy was bound by treaty to Germany and there was some doubt as to what would happen. It became clear that Italian sympathies were on the side opposed to Germany and she took part very soon.

Many changes have taken place since that time and now we find Italy and Germany the closest of friends or at any rate their dictators are and the rest of the people follow the lead of the dictators. They dare not do anything else.

Should Germany or Italy again return to the democratic fold, there may be changes in foreign policy, each side taking its cue from its leaders.

Once the Spanish trouble is settled it will be easier for the nations to get together unless some other complication should set in such as the entry of Russia into the Chinese war. Already Russia is said to be taking part but not officially just as Italy and Germany and Russia are not officially taking part in the war in Spain. Just now it is difficult to know when a nation is at war.

HUMAN LIFE

Under modern conditions human life seems of little importance. It was always so only in a different way. Away back in the earlier ages the slaves or common workers were looked upon as of only such value as they would bring in the open market. If they were killed, the loss was a property loss.

Today the people of the world view human life differently. In that we have made progress. There are still great famines such as those of recent years in China and Russia in which many thousands have perished when they might have been saved if the resources of the country had been used to save them. On the whole today the loss of human lives is looked on as a tragedy and not as a property loss. There is a much greater fellow feeling today than ever was the case in the past. Let a person of any prominence be lost or abducted or charged with crime and the whole world becomes interested. It is the interest of a human being for another of its own kind. That is why the world views with horror the slaughter of non-combatants in China.

must be encouraged if the nation is to prosper.

The speaker analyzed the relief situation, showing that there were people who were unfortunate and wanted to work but, in spite of their efforts, could not find any. There were others who would work, but rather reluctantly, if it was offered them, and there were others who would not work in any case. The men in charge of relief should deal intelligently with the question and not lump all together. Business men were, he considered, the ones who should undertake to look after the unemployed. It was their problem. Business should gradually absorb all except those physically unfit.

Concluding, the Judge said there was no excuse for unem-
