LIBERTY IN A SHACK

Liberty in a shack is better than severe restrictions A woman may not know what News and learn that Bernice have you. I have another comin a palace. That is the feeling of the average Anglo-Sax- she wants but she usually gets it. on. Yet it must be admitted that our boasted democracy is not by any means the most efficient method of government. Take Italy as an example. None of us like the idea of not be done and those who go to being restricted in our liberties and regimented as they work and do it. are in the country ruled over by Mussolini. The Italians, however, seem to like it.

A recent visitor to Italy, writing of her observations, roost. tells how the indolent people of the old days have been transformed into aggressive vitalized men and women. There is greater efficiency, self sufficiency and ambition shown everywhere. The cities are no longer dirty and unkempt and the beggars have disappeared from the streets, south a prisoner and a mental pa- We did have a thunder storm instances, originality came naturespecially those frequented by tourists. Today cleanli- tient. ness is apparent everywhere both in the streets and the people. The street cleaners really work and take a pride

The visitor notes that there is efficiency even in the customs department and that everything is done to make the visits of tourists pleasant. Auto horns are taboo, in fact it s aganst the law to blow a horn in the crowded streets and at night the flash of lights takes the place of the horn. Iron fences are being replaced by education, the people there being taught ta respet public and private property. Great public works have been carried out, giving employment to many and those unable to work are cared for by the state.

While we do not like many of the methods of the corporative state we have to admit that it is getting results and, if we are to keep pace with these fascist countries we shall have to try to adapt some of their methods to our democracy or we shall be left far behind in the advance of civilization.

Nobody in Italy refuses to work and then whines because the government relief is so small. The Duce has no use for that kind of citizen and neither has a democracy. Our methods will certainly have to change. Liberty in a shack is all right but it does not always make for progress.

SEES IMPORTANT CENTRE

"I thoroughly believe that, in spite of little setbacks of the past, Prince Rupert is going to be an important centre. Vancouver cannot always keep the city back. The natural resources being developed and the general movement of business northward is bound to result in an inerease in population and an increase in prestige of this northern centre. Some people here have waited a long time for this development but I do not think they will have to wait much longer. I see great changes coming about in the next few years." This was the sentiment expressed by a local businessman who is in close touch with the whole country and who does not himself expect to be in the city to share its prosperity. It is the view held by us. We were hoping that the pulp mill might have come soon and that there would have been an influx of new people with new ideals, new ideas and plenty of pluck to stand by what they believe to be best for the city. What we need is a few new fighters, men with vision and virility to take up the fight where the old timers seem to have left off.

We are not suggesting that the pulp mill is not coming. We believe it will but its coming is bound to be delayed for a few months or possibly a year or so. In the meantime we must carry on as if it was never heard of. After all, the building of a city does not depend upon one industry, important as such an industry must be.

SWINGTIME IN QUINTUPLET LAND

Swingtime has reached the Dafo hospital in Callendar, Ont., but it's not the kind usually associated with Hollywood or Broadway. This swingtime is the old fashioned type of fastening a swing to a tree and sailing high into the air. Annette Dionne, who seems to be going individu listic, has already learned the technique of leaning forward to accelerate her speed. Her four sisters are equally at home on a swing as is the famous quint shown above could do without half trying! But to go back to the beginning and that letter. Ever since becoming a publicity hound and breaking into print, I have rather prided myself on the way I settled down to become commonplace even to the extent of purchasing a dictionary and consulting it when the occasion arose. There are only three cardinal rules in journalism, I learned-accuracy, accuracy and more accuracy. I spent hours verifying recipes, bits of news and what have you, not to mention the hours ment trying to locate words in the newest and most exreasive addition of a standard dictionary. My manuscripts became masterpieces of conventional shelling-but-and here is where the rub comes-evidently someone in the Daily News office didn't understand the extent of my refor-

When it comes to spelling "California" with the "r" before the "o" and making this " ir state sound like some patent medicine, well, there is reason for remonstrance. I wouldn't mind it so much if it wasn't for the money frittered away on a dictionary. Dictionaries are supposed to make everything right again.
