A crowd of hungry refugees overturned and attempted to seize two truckloads of rice. They were driven off by members of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps.

Mammoth fires blazed hopelessly out of control and threatened at least two thirds of the native city with destruction.

Incendiary bombs have hurled by Japanese and Chinese forces over a thirty mile front with destructive fury while hundreds of foreigners fled the city amid tearful scenes.

Large portions of Pootung and Chapei ablaze added to the horor and suffering.

Undisciplined mobs searched the sterrts of Shanghai Wednesday morning, beating and killing natives suspecting of plotting to poison the city water supply while the thousands of homeless refugees clamored for food.

The bitter battle between the Chinese and Japanese resumed early in the morning when Japanese warships began bombardment of Chinese positions along the Whangpoo River.
