DRIFTING CAMP OF SOVIET SCIENTISTS BREAKS UP

This photo from Moscow, showing Ivan Papanin, leader of the Soviet scientific party that wintered at the North Pole, as he packed ice around one of his tents, was made last year when the party settled down for their long, cold vigil at the top of the world. Papanin and his three companions were adrift on a floating ice floe in the Arctic, with their floe gradually getting smaller while Soviet icebreakers were rushing to their aid. The scientists kept keeping in touch with Moscow by means of the radio they installed on the floe.
