Graduate Opinion From Coast to Coast Shows Little Taste For Glamor of Wars Overseas

TORONTO, June 13: (CP)—Canada's 1938 university graduate brigade, 5,500 strong, is too preoccupied with its drive for a place in Canada's progress in peace to worry much about its possible part in a widespread war in Europe, Asia or Africa.

This also goes for the women graduates who held an increased proportion in degree rolls of 1938. The challenge of home service, adventures in new fields of women's endeavour right here in Canada—even to engineering and veterinary science—seem to outweigh the glamor of overseas military service, field nursing and motor driving over war-scarred areas, that attracted co-eds of 20 years ago.

Just before this year's graduates forsook the campuses of the score or so universities of the Dominion, The Canadian Press sought their impressions on war service. What was their feeling toward (1) enlistment in British Imperial Forces if the United Kingdom entered a European war, (2) voluntary enlistment in an expeditionary force Canada might send to an overseas war in which the United Kingdom or the Empire engaged and (3) enlistment in Canada's forces if Canada were attacked by armed enemies.

The reaction to the inquiries across Canada is perhaps best summarized in the reply of the president of a Nova Scotia university: "Student debate is naturally invariably on the side of peace. I should say that the response to overseas adventure would probably be slight. I don't think, however, there would be any hesitation to come to the defense of Canada or of the Empire at large in the case of definite aggression from a foreign power."

Another Maritime educational head viewed it a little differently however. He thought there had been a great change in the feeling of students towards war during the last few months. "There are few, if any pacifist students now. They realize that if war becomes inevitable it will be their place to fight under whatsoever conditions those in charge indicate." A questionnaire in a large Quebec university revealed "no drastic pacifist tendencies" among the students.

The Canadian Press correspondent found representative students of a large Ontario university quite frank in expressing their views regarding war service. Many of those interviewed were opposed to enlistment in British Imperial Forces if the United Kingdom entered a European war and not quite so many objected to voluntary enlistment in a Canadian expeditionary force to an overseas war involving the United Kingdom or the Empire. Without exception, however, all were in favor of enlistment.
