GARDEN NOTEBOOK

It has been fine lately for digging the gardens and setting them in order for the sowing of seeds or the planting out of seedlings. Many people are sowing their vegetable and flower seeds now and even planting their dahlias. As long as the dahlia tubers are well covered they will be quite safe and they will begin to make root immediately. I plan to plant mine within a few days if the weather is favorable.

"What shall I plant?" is a very common question. Plant what you

My broad beans are just coming through the ground and are all ready for rapid growth. The old idea was that they should be sown in February if the weather was fine but in this climate there is a possibility of the seed rotting in the ground if the weather is too wet and cold for a long period. However, early sowing is advisable for both beans and peas.

Complaints continue to come to hand about the quantities of moss in the lawns this spring. There is some in the C.N.R.A. bowling lawn where the utmost care is taken in draining and seeding and caring for the green. I am still of opinion that if the land is thoroughly drained, the only cure is to increase the fertility of the soil and that can be done best by application of a complete fertilizer at more or less regular intervals.

Early in May is the time set by experts for the sowing of seeds of perennials—hollyhocks, lupins, delphiniums and columbines. Others may bloom this year if sown too early and that seems to weaken them for wintering. Canterbury Bells were nearly all killed last winter and the only way to renew them is to sow a new supply for next year now. If Siberian wall-flowers are sown now under glass they will probably bloom this fall. I sowed a small patch outdoors about at this time two or three years ago and a few of them bloomed that year.

like to see in your beds. This is the time to think about annuals as the perennials are just about past their transplanting season. Study a catalogue or look over your neighbor's flower magazine or talk to your neighbor about it. Your florist will usually tell you what will grow here successfully. All depends upon likes or dislikes. No one can plan a planting to suit another unless he knows what is in his neighbor's mind. For yellows, calendulas or nasturtiums give lots of color. Some like the little French marigold better known as tagetes. Asters come mostly in purples and whites. If you do not want to buy seedlings, try buying a packet or two of viscaria seeds and you will have plenty of color.

For late summer and fall blooming, of course, you will want dahlias. If possible get good named varieties and take care of the bulbs in the fall and label them. Many growers refuse to have any unnamed varieties of any flowers in their gardens.—H.F.P.

Once Rare Orchid Blooms As Roses

Boston Growers Have Developed Species Till Its Familiar

BOSTON, April 26: (CP)—Orchids were a novelty even to the best flower growers at the time of the Great War, rarely seen by the public. Today they are as familiar as roses to almost any assembly of Bostonians.

Their period of popularity began in Boston with the election of the late Albert C. Burrage to the presidency of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. He sponsored the debut of the orchid and for 10 years watched its upward career under his own guidance until the orchid became one of the best-loved flowers in any large flower show. Even the American Orchid Society came to Boston to give a show.

Side by side with the great pink and white heads of the Cattleya, large as dinner plates, will be orchids whose blooms are not much larger than the head of a pin. More delicate hues or purer colors are never found than these flowers present. In this work of developing the science of orchid culture, Robert Doig of the Burrage Shows has had the aid of his sister who has become a specialist in her particular field, that of taking the pollen from one orchid flower and placing it in the fruiting body of another, a process of cross-pollination which is a means of hybridization that promises much for the future of American orchids.
