Discrepancies arose in the allocation of items for which the minister of finance might legitimately borrow.

The report of the banking commission speaks plainly about the necessity of avoiding confusion of this kind. The commission found that deadweight debt amounting to £15,495,000 ($75,150,750) had been accumulated by unbalanced budgets since the foundation of selfgovernment in the Free State of Ireland. To clear up the matter the com-nission recommends that the bor-! rowing powers of the exchequer should be severely limited. It is urged that many items of expenditure regarded as suitable to be met by borrowing should be dealt with; specially by law (as in England) Any discretionary power to select items of expenditure included in borrowing, it is declared, is open to serious objection.
