pretty much everything in the way of excess expenses.

In former years the farmer took his eggs to the country store and received groceries, etc., in trade. The grocer sent his eggs to a commission man in the market. The commission man disposed of them and remitted part of the proceeds to the grocer.

Today buyers go through the country and pay cash for all of the eggs offered. Competition is keen, and if a buyer doesn't pay a fair price based on the market he doesn't get the eggs.

Years ago nearly everything was handled by grocers in bulk, weighed out and sold by the pound. Today most everything is put up and sold in packages, cartons, cans, glasses.

No matter what the disposition of the retailer may be, he must meet this growing demand for better goods.

The average grocer does not speculate. He buys for his legitimate wants, and, generally speaking, dislikes to see goods advance in price. He is unable to obtain a better margin of profit and it takes more capital to conduct his business.

Many food manufacturers are today considering the advisability of placing a selling price on their commodity at which it shall reach the consumer, giving to the wholesaler and retailer a fair per cent. for distributing the products.

While pure food, honest weight, collection laws and other matters which vitally concern the consumer as well as the dealer, and which our association is trying to
