OF BOYS Constable R. Eveleigh Does Work As Policeman He Wanted to Do As Minister

VANCOUVER, March 23: (CP)-Constable Ronald Eveleigh accomplished as a policeman the job he planned 10 years before when training for the ministry at the University of British Columbia.

"I was always interested in boys, and wanted to help them," said the supervisor of the year-old Junior G-Men, a boys' club with 2,000 members in British Columbia and branches in other parts of Canada.

"That's what I had in mind when I started at the U.B.C., but after three years the depression put an end to those plans and I got a police job."

asked about their favorite characters in fiction and movies. "G-men!" was the answer, and so they were called the Junior G-Men. The name attracted youngsters quickly and membership soared to 100 within a month. Volunteer Instructors

Adult instructors volunteered aid. A service club helped Eveleigh obtain an abandoned factory. The boys made it a club-house, the first of five in Vancouver where lads between the ages of eight and 18 can practise any one of 30 hobbies.

Before many weeks the group became a city-wide movement. Eveleigh was given leave of absence from the city police to aid organ-
