UNITY UNDER DEMOCRACY

Anthony Eden says that in the autocratic states, and we presume that he includes Russia in the list, there is a vitality and an enthusiasm on behalf of the faith that has been fostered among them which it would be a grave mistake to belittle. He sees mass enthusiasm and fervor the result of ruthless propaganda and suppression of criticism. Children are trained to dedicate their lives to the ideal of the country as represented by the government and doubts and questions are not allowed. The training they receive has no duplicate in history. By this intensive training and the elimination of criticism, a national unity is created which stands in marked contrast to the unity of the democracy where students are taught to question everything and to think for themselves.

Judging by what one reads the British Empire today would be at sixes and sevens. Canada and South Africa sometimes seem almost as if their people might split over the matter of taking part in a possible war. No crisis presents itself so no unity is needed.

But Anthony Eden sees a great change taking place immediately should the Empire be in danger. Immediately national unity would be attained and it would be a unity that would be more effective than any in the totalitarian states. He points out that in the great war those nations which had been trained in democratic traditions best withstood the strain.

This may not be a very happy subject to discuss but it is very appropriate at a time like this when personal freedom is at a low ebb and the dictators on both sides threaten the idealism of all free peoples. In Canada we maintain our freedom to the limit and often overstep it by allowing representatives of other ideologies to preach their doctrines by making unfair and misleading statements in the course of their propaganda. We allow them to injure our industrial life and poison the minds of the young, all in the sacred name of "liberty." It is only in time of stress that pressure is exerted to curb these activities. Subversive movements are part of the war machine of the enemy but we notice them only when the necessity becomes so great that we cannot allow them to continue. If the British Empire was attacked tomorrow these movements would have to be carefully hidden. They would, doubtless, continue but only under cover.

KETCHIKAN CITY OF VERY MUCH CHARM

ists, this being the first and last port of call in Alaska.

What struck me forcibly was the alertness of the people and the keenness of the businessmen of Ketchikan. They have plenty of pep. Their enthusiasm is catching and visitors tend to get some of it as a result of a visit. They all believe in their city and are never backward in expressing themselves in regard to it. There seems to be an excellent community spirit. The welfare of Ketchikan comes ahead of all other considerations.

Prince Rupert is well ahead in the matter of flower gardens but in rock gardens Ketchikan excels us. Houses are being built gradually farther up the mountainside until walking-home to lunch must be a problem. However, they all have cars and most of them make enough money to take their cars outside occasionally and make a tour through the States.

The stores are right up to the minute but, while it has a ten and fifteen cent store where cheap things are sold, the average prices seem to be higher than in Prince Rupert. Citizens there pay nine dollars a year or a dollar a month for their daily paper. Restaurant prices are higher.

In good locations store rents are high but the merchants generally seem to make money, keep up good establishments and spend freely. Everybody seems happy and not quite as prone to grumble as in Prince Rupert.

Cheap Bus Service

Among the cheap things in the city was an admirable bus service running out Tongas Avenue along the waterfront for two miles and the cost of a ride is only five cents each way or six rides for 25c. These buses are very comfortable. They are owned by different parties but operate alternately, giving a regular half hour service all day and well into the night. They are well patronized by both visitors and residents. I was told the buses cost three thousand dollars each. They run under charter from the city and must give proper service or lose their charter. Evidently they are paying very well.

Another cheap thing in Ketchikan is fire protection. They have a volunteer fire brigade with only the chief drawing a salary. I was told.

Finally may I remind Prince Rupert people that we get a lot of business from Ketchikan. Our railway gets a great deal of freight that way and there is a possibility of getting more. There should be a great deal of community interest between the two cities. We both might benefit from knowing each other better.

ROAD TO FLOATS

Editor, Daily News: These few lines are written in behalf of the property owners of Sections 7 and 8 without animosity to any other section of the city.

Whereas I, in common with many other property owners in these two sections, feel that a policy of discrimination is being imposed on us through the failure of the City Commissioner to open the avenue of access and egress to the fishermen's floats and Dry Dock through the roadway leading down from Sixth Avenue on the east side of Hays Creek.

It has been stated that the reason we are denied the use of this short cut road to the above mentioned places is because the Dry Dock company objects due to the fact they are obliged to maintain that portion of the waterfront roadway leading from Swift's premises to the dry dock known as the Dry Dock Road. That, in my opinion, is a reasonable objection from the dry dock management point of view but should not be accepted by the Commissioner as an excuse for denying the public the use of the short cut route.

Two four-foot posts and a pole at the dry dock gate would prohibit the alleged abuse to the dry dock road and would allow sections 7 and 8 their proper entrance to these waterfront points without using the dry dock roadway and the people of other sections would not be inconvenienced in the slightest as they would have the same open roadway to the dry dock they now possess. If going to fishermen's float they could travel by way of Sixth or Seventh Avenues across Hays Creek and down the new road to the floats.

This would simply be a matter of equality to all sections of the city and would be a far greater incentive to the people of sections 7 and 8 to pay up taxes than the annual visit of Mr. Buckley.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,
GEO. B. CASEY

Man in the Moon

A friend once reprimanded Will Rogers for his use of "ain't."

To the well-intentioned rebuke, Will replied: "Maybe ain't ain't so correct, but I notice lots of folks who ain't using ain't, ain't eatin'."

"Am I rightly informed that you are offering a reward for the dog you lost?"

"Good gracious, have you found my Filf?"

"No, but I intend looking for it and came to ask for a little advance."

At a luncheon of newspaper men the following toast was offered:

"The ladies! Second only to the press in the dissemination of news!"

MENTIONED AS PONTIFF

Cardinal Laurenti Might Have Been Pope Had He Lived

ROME, Sept. 7: (AP)—The name of Cardinal Camillo Laurenti, dead here, was often mentioned as one of those who might be chosen Pope.

He was stationed in Rome at the time of Benedict's death and was at his bedside during his fatal illness, being the last man to kiss the Pope before he expired.

Laurenti is said to have been born in Rome. Early in his career he became connected with the University of Propaganda where he was for some time a teacher of philosophy and became secretary of the Congregation of the Propaganda in 1911.

He retained that position until 1921 when he was made a Cardinal in company with Cardinals Ratti and Porcelli. Cardinal Laurenti was mentioned as one of those who might be appointed as Apostolic delegate to Washington to succeed Falconio in 1911 but Monsignor Bonzano, rector of the Propaganda College, was chosen.

Cardinal Laurenti spoke English fluently and had considerable experience in affairs affecting the Catholic Church in America. By his connection with the Congregation of the Propaganda he taught many American students.

Later he was Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of Rites.
