A WONDERFUL ATTRACTION

The point of the story is the wonderful attraction that a single flower can be at a country place difficult of access. What might Prince Rupert do if the local gardens were made sufficiently attractive? By the combined efforts of the provincial government at its court house gardens, the C.N.R. at its sunken gardens, the city of Prince Rupert at its Totem Park and the hundreds of individuals who are now taking an interest in beautification, Prince Rupert could be made so attractive that every visitor to Alaska would want to call at Prince Rupert and many would make the trip just to see the city. The possibilities are endless. Once it gets going one objective after another might be reached and passed.

Prince Rupert is right in the course of tourist travel. Already people are looking forward to visits to the city, chiefly because of the flowers. The fame of the local gardens is spreading and yet the work has only commenced. This summer should see all past records shattered. Splendid work is being done by many residents and, if each continues the work and others are added each season, we should have achieved fame from a source which at one time was not only unsuspected but thought impossible.
