NEW DEALS FOR WOMEN

Metropolis Marks Mental Effects From Fashions in Institutions And Makes Reforms

LONDON, Jan. 24: (CP)—How much the care of woman's appearance contributes to her sanity is under investigation and by no cold-blooded psychologist this time but through the London County Council.

Schools, hospitals and public institutions of every variety in this world metropolis come under the jurisdiction of this group which, far from being conservative and averse to innovations, has most advanced and up-to-date views and methods.

In one of the London County Council's mental hospitals two women hairdressers are now permanently employed giving beauty treatments which include water-waving and henna applications, scalp massage, face massage, face packs, eyebrow trimming and wax treatment for removing hairs.

Nor does the interest of the august and humane council stop there. In several of the Old People's Homes—previously called workhouses—there are aged women time has bereft of all hair. These the council provides with wigs—and of their own choosing. Visitors to the institutions are frequently surprised when they glimpse a proudly-held golden-yellow head among the hundreds crowned with more than usual silver. The wigs are sent to the hairdressers and given up to the minute coiffures several times a year at the council's expense.

Fashions for Inmates
Fashions in the Public Assistance Institutions (ex-workhouses have been occupying no little attention at council meetings lately) and the distinguished men and women who run the public affairs of London have had their little difficulties when they tried new styles on old figures. A fashion note specially written by an institution matron occupied a prominent position in the council's recently-issued annual report and in tactful language gave an idea of slight hitches.

One paragraph mentions "the traditional women's shawl, so prominent in institutions previously, has now been replaced by colored cardigans although a good many of the old women prefer the shawl. As the cardigan is comparatively a modern innovation for women's wear, considerable time must elapse before the cardigan will completely replace the shawl." Which means the council will have to go on buying shawls in spite of the best intentions.

The fashion difficulties of the London County Council even extend into the realm of unmentionables. "Efforts made to modernize the old women's underclothing have not always been received with acclamation. But with continued patience and frequent gentle persuasion the majority of women now are wearing well-shaped 'interlock' stockinette garments and sateen slips instead of voluminous flannel and calico garments."

The matron's report closes, however, on quite a frivolous note "I find the girlhood wish for a new hat still alive in the bosoms of our old girls." The matron then describes how hats are chosen by lottery, the inmate drawing "No. 1" having first choice among those sent in.

There are 14 women members of the London County Council which numbers 144 members all told. One reason given for its progressive ideas is that women have taken part in its discussions since 1909.

Politics Lose Appeal
Other aspects of politics must be losing their appeal to women in England or perhaps the possibilities of advancement are not sufficiently advertised. There is a shortage of candidates for posts as party organizers and a special examination is to be held early in the year. Women between 23 and 40 are eligible and the average salary is $1,000 to $1,250 per year. In the Conservative offices many responsible posts are held by women who began as organizers and at the present time Miss Marjorie Maxse is second in charge.
