PRINCE RUPERT'S INCOME

Visitors often ask where the income is derived to support a city the size of Prince Rupert. While the answer usually is that we are a fishing town doing a large fish export business and that we have two large cold storage plants as well as fish buying establishments, many do not realize how important are some of the other industries. We have, for instance, a drydock and shipyard with an average employment of well over fifty, mostly expert mechanics. We have railroad shops employing at least another fifty and railway offices and steamship offices and docks, all employing some men and girls. We have provincial offices filling one large building and federal offices filling another large building. There is too an elevator with a permanent all-year staff. There is a provincial sampling plant and an assay office, the latter conducted for the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. There are at least four wholesale houses distributing food stuffs to the country around as well as abbatoir and reduction plants. There is the fleet of several hundred power boats operating chiefly in connection with the halibut and salmon fisheries, consuming gasoline and oil. There are mills at Billmor and Georgetown as well as smaller! mills on Kaien Island and Digby Island. There are smaller boat building establishments and machine shops, a splendid power plant and in the district there are large logging operations and a large fish packing industry with over twenty canneries in operation during the season. There are also the mines which are tributary to a large extent; to the city.

It will be seen from this that the city is not what is generally known as a one-horse town. It has all the activities and facilities of the large city with permanent buildings. Local people who cannot see anything in all this portending future growth and development of an important nature are very short-sighted. They are too close to big things to see them. They are like those who cannot see the forest because of the trees.

CANADIAN LEGION STRONG FORCE IN COMMUNITY

Mr. Macnicol discussed the activities of the Veterans' Assistance Commission of which he had been a member, dealing in detail with some of its recommendations.

Future of Legion

In discussing the future of the Legion, Mr. Macnicol said that branches should interest themselves in junior branches with a view to bringing in the sons of ex-servicemen by organizing junior units and later transferring them to the senfior units under a special class of membership.
