ARMY CHIEF IS FIGHTER; RAPID RISE

Viscount Gort, V. C., Commander in The Field, Got Ahead Through Industry And Ability

LONDON, Sept. 16: (CP)— Appointment of Viscount Gort, V. C., as Commander-in-Chief of British forces in the field when Britain went to war with Germany, brought to light a military career in which service of high distinction, untiring energy and industry and an odd episode on the ski-runs of Switzerland all had their part.

"Tiger" Gort rose from the rank of major-general to the highest active command in the British army all in the space of two years. His promotion upset the sang froid of military circles but on all sides the government's choice met with whole-hearted approval.

It started in 1937 when War Secretary Leslie Hore-Belisha, answering the demand for a shake-up in the British high command appointed the 51-year old Viscount Gort as chief of the general staff. Hore-Belisha disregarded seniority qualifications and made the appointment over the heads of some 30 senior generals.

Then military secretary to the war secretary, Gort, a member of a distinguished soldiering family, had a record of 32 years in the army. Going into the Great War as a captain in 1914, the Sandhurst trained officer won decoration after decoration and as a brevet-major in 1918, won the Victoria Cross, Britain's highest military award for valor.

A few months before the armistice in 1918, Gort was leading the Grenadier Guards in an attack across the Canal du Nord. Twice he was severely wounded. But he insisted on being carried forward on a stretcher, directing the advance until the position was won. Only when flames announced the capture of the goal did Gort collapse.

Previously he had won the Military Cross and Distinguished Service Order and had been mentioned in dispatches nine times.

When Hore-Belisha was looking for a military secretary to help him rejuvenate the army, the war secretary recalled an incident in Switzerland and a hurried trip to Ascot, where Gort was engaged in manoeuvres, followed.

"Who the hell are you?" demanded Hore-Belisha, picking himself out of the snow.

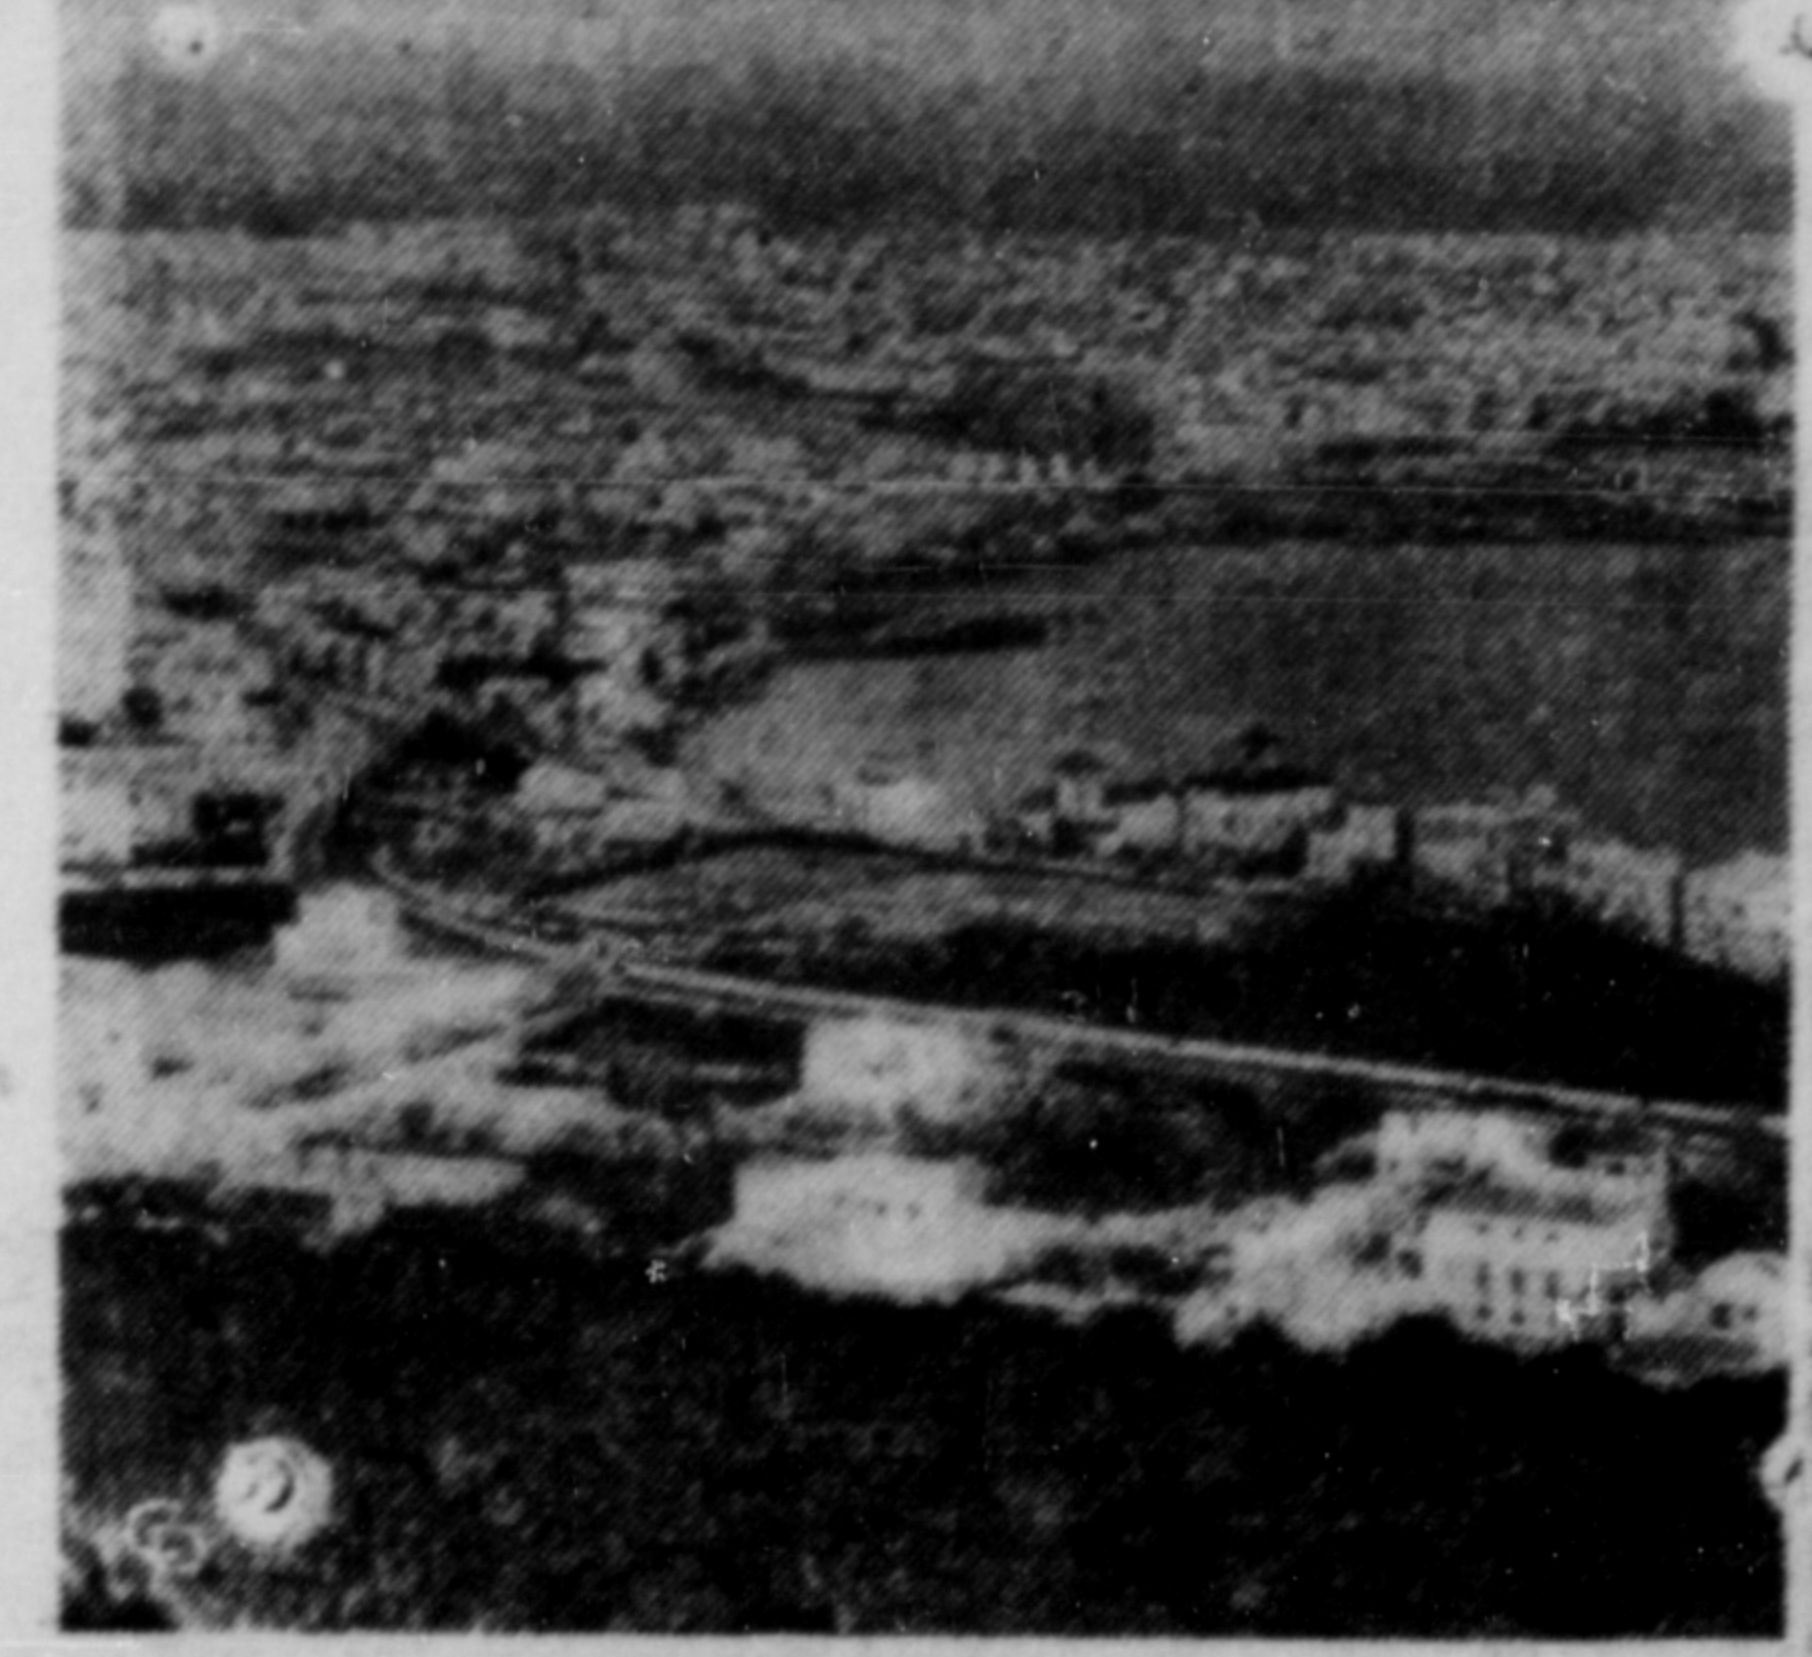

"Gort," was the terse reply. The Commander-in-Chief, a soldier from head to toes, was said by a fellow officer to be "hard but no bully." He added the "Tiger" had no time for anything but his work.

Served in Orient

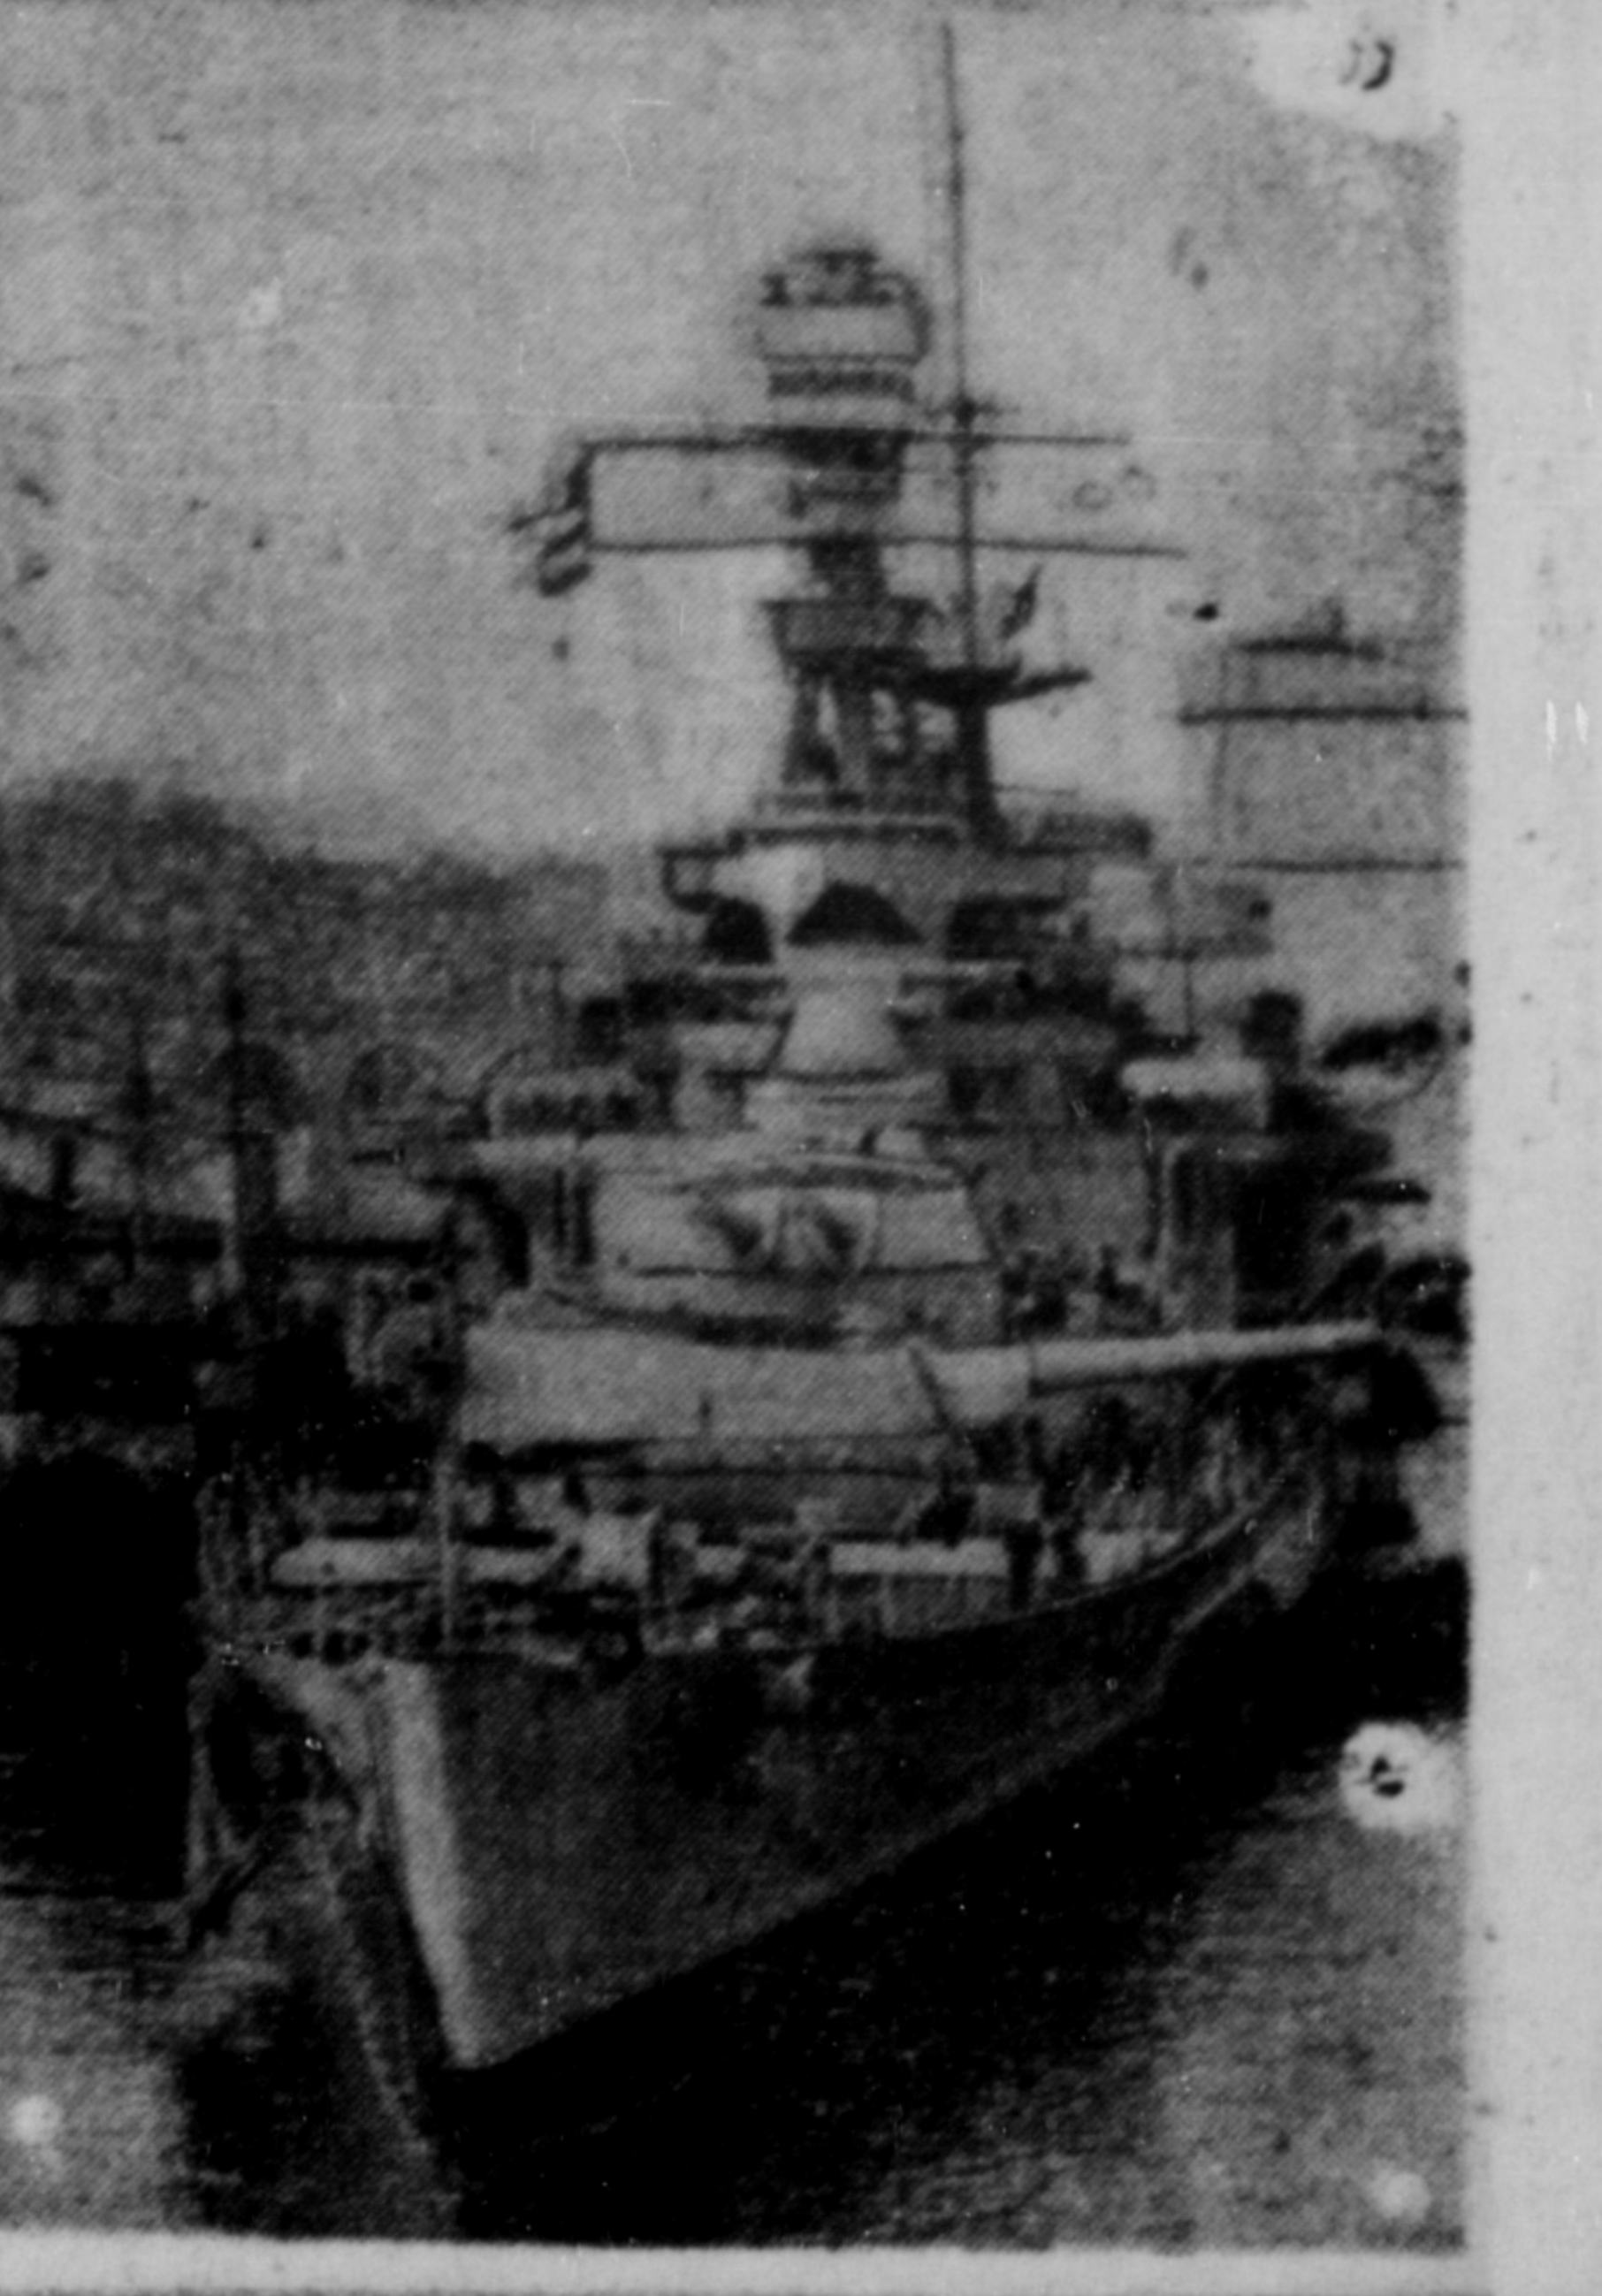

During the past two years a personal acquaintance with conditions in the Orient has been valuable with undeclared war raging between Japan and China. Gort has also seen service in India. A qualified pilot, he learned to fly a few years before he became chief of the Imperial General Staff.

Since 1937, wide army reforms, many of them having to do with mechanization, have been instituted under Viscount Gort's direction. One of the most important was the creation of a large strategic reserve "in a zone from which it could be directed where security was most likely to be threatened." This involved reduction by

BRITISH BATTLESHIP AND-CRISIS CENTRE

A view of Palma, Majorca, in the Balearic Islands which is another storm centre in the crisis in the Mediterranean. The British government ordered H.M.S. Hood, the world's most powerful warship (right), to proceed from Gibraltar to Palma. Officially, the shift was explained as a routine move.
