TH EPREMIER

The visit of Premier Pattullo this week impressed some local people more than ever in the past as being the visit of a man who is thoroughly master of the situation. The Premiership does not worry him or wear him down He takes it as a matter of course, gets up early, works steadily during the day and sometimes into the night and has little time for recreation. Yet he tries to get in a round of golf each day, if possible. He has to step just is outside his door to be on the Oak Bay course and a round! So in the morning puts him in first class physical condition. I'm

Mr. Pattullo is not a rich man but he has just enough iBr money to place him in the happy position of not having to worry over his job. He can get along very well without the premiership and it is only love of the work and the feeling that he can best serve British Columbia in that position that makes him continue. Without active employ-IN ment he would probably die. Politics has been his work for the past twenty-two years and it is the only job he is likely to do from this time on.

The Premier of British Columbia is a force not only in this province but throughout Canada. His name is well known everywhere and especially at Ottawa. Wash ington looks on him as one of Canada's big men. And yet in Victoria, where he lives, he is too busy to meet many people. It is only here in his own constituency when he gets a few days off occasionally that he is able to mix with his fellows as an ordinary citizen, relax and enjoy himself in his own old home town.

Mr. Pattullo is not naturally a good mixer. He is not the type that is usually a politician. He is naturally rather reserved in disposition and during the early days of his political life he received many lectures from his Keron political friends on how to make a good fellow of himself. As he has become accustomed to the life he seems to have trained himself to get in touch with men in every walk of life and to get their point of view on affairs. That is Canadian Legion what makes him so human. He has always had to work wins In Bridge hard and he likes people who work, no matter whether wins In Bridge it is working with the brain or the hands. He is familiar with the problems of the men who dig ditches just as with the men who manage large businesses or factories.

The writer remembers the time when the first returns from one of the general elections seemed to intimate that Mr. Pattullo was defeated and that his party was probably in a minority. He took it very philospophically, saying that when a man went into political life he last night played a postponed fixmust expect defeat. Yet he has not yet been defeated ture in the Prince Rupert Bridge personally in a provincial election and does not seem to League last night, the veterans winlook for it. He expects to win again, should he decide to This puts the Legion in seventh carry on through another election, for he feels that he has place in the standing with the Musserved the province well.

There was a time a few years ago when he had a dangerous time in the Prince Rupert General Hospital. He had seen other men similarly afflicted pass on but such a thought never seemed to have occurred to him. He is very tenacious of life, lives it to the full, enjoys his work as well as his play, loves to wrestle with knotty problems just as do some men with crossword puzzles.

This may not be a complete word picture of the Premier. It may not be quite correct in all details but it is the impression the writer gets from frequent observation covering a period of twenty years.
