EYES ON CHUNGKING

The eyes of the world are likely to turn again to China soon and particularly to the new capital of the country, Chungking. The city is difficult of access from the east but from the southwest it is connected with the port of Rangoon by way of Burma. The highway, which we have mentioned before, is 1400 miles long and has been constructed by coolie labor within the past year over mountain ranges and through a wonderfully wild and picturesque country. It is said to be a splendid highway and over it the Chinese are now getting supplies for their armies. As soon as these are properly equipped and their leaders consider the time opportune, it is proposed to make a big effort to drive the Japanese out of the country. The Japanese smile inscrutably at the threat but the Chinese have great faith that if they do not accomplish it this year they will do so next year or the year after. These men in almost all cases own their fishing boats and, at the conclusion of the period, they spend their money in town, remaining most of the time in or near Prince Rupert.

Many of them read widely and 157 many are philosophers, politicians and occasionally poets MODERN Bung ow, two bedrooms, 7:30 with a good attendance and rived in port at 3 o'clock this or prose writers. They are a fine lot of men and one of the greatest assets Prince Rupert has. We take this opportunity of wishing them luck, large catches and pleasant trolling weather this year.

FLURRY IS OVER?

Another story is to the effect that two German secret police have been sent to Roumania to "get" King Carol and that developments are expected soon. This is one of those weird tales heard in the European centres which may prove true or may not.
