TELLS OF AMUNDSEN

Pastor of Lutheran Church Gives Interesting Description of Trip To South Pole

A particularly interesting account of the life of Roald Amundsen, the Arctic and Antarctic explorer, was given at the Rotary Club luncheon yesterday by Rev. J. H. Myrwang, pastor of the St. Paul's Lutheran Church, in which the speaker spoke of early education and early voyages of discovery by this intrepid mariner. The account of the discovery of the South Pole Mr. Myrwang was got from Amundsen himself. It was told yesterday as follows:

"Having satisfied himself that the North Polar regions had nothing of paramount importance to offer at this time, Amundsen set sail for the south in 1910. I have heard the story of this memorable expedition from his own lips and I found it a story as barren of oratory as the regions he visited were of flora but abounding in action and heroic achievement. Sailing southeast from the Cape of Good Hope, he passed through the roaring forties, the foggy fifties and the icy sixties and tied up at the ice barrier at Whale Bay, southeast of Australia. He had chosen this bay as his base for many good reasons but especially because no other expedition would be likely to interfere with his work at this place. English explorers had established themselves several hundred miles farther west and Shackleton had penetrated into the Antarctic continent up to 88 degrees and 23 minutes south latitude. At this point, however, he was compelled to return.

At Whale Bay

"Amundsen made good use of his time at Whale Bay. He headed an expedition to explore the country to the south and build depots and markers along the route to be followed later so as to have provisions in readiness when needed. This was done before winter set in and, when the long night finally settled down on them, they were snugly hidden away in their vessel or in rooms which they had cut out of the ice barrier to serve as winter quarters.

"The distance to the Pole was 700 miles. As soon as the sun returned in 1911, Amundsen and his men were up and doing. The dog teams were trained to the highest point of efficiency. Supplies consisting mainly of tents, clothing and crackers and pemican were loaded on the sledges and the dangers and difficulties of the stormy and rough country through which they must make the hazardous journey to the Pole and back to their base were weighed and considered with the greatest care.

"The first leg of the journey, covering about 367 miles, was made over the comparatively low and level ice fields of the northern part of the Antarctic continent.

At the end of this part of their journey they faced a mountain barrier several thousand feet high and bristling with terrors.

"Four days of continuous labor were consumed in scaling this formidable barrier and it was necessary to rest for some time on the edge of the plateau before proceeding farther south. The plateau was found to be 10,000 feet above sea level and the temperature was correspondingly low. Frequent storms, some of them of incredible violence, swept the plateau and tried the endurance of the explorers to the utmost. The cold wind cut their faces until bleeding sores were formed that did not heal for months. The expedition pushed on, however, establishing depots and building markers in a systematic manner and progress was made in spite of every obstacle.

"When they reached 88 and 23 minutes, which was the southernmost latitude reached by Shackleton, they paused to honor this brave man. From there on they knew that the foot of man had never disturbed the snows of the polar region. As they neared their destination the weather improved greatly and travel became easier. Having but little confidence in the weather, however, they put up markers and built monuments of snow, leaving supplies of food so as to make sure of their return.

At The Pole

"December 14, 1911, found Roald Amundsen and his four companions at the South Pole. A silk tent was pitched there and a flag of white was waving triumphantly at the pole as they left it three days later. Amundsen placed a written record of the expedition in the tent and his record was read some time later by the ill-fated Englishman Scott who failed to return to his base. He and his

UNEMPLOYED IN BUSINESS

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 15: (CP)—California, unwilling host to thousands of dust bowl refugees and other victims of the depression, is preparing to set them up in business for themselves. Confronted with a mounting bill for unemployment relief which has soared from $39,000,000 in 1933 to $123,000,000 during the last fiscal year, the state has launched a production-for-use program which it believes will eventually provide jobs for many of its 700,000 unemployed.

KILLED BY FISH

BOMBAY, Dec. 15: (CP)—D. K. Kershaw, an accountant, was bitten in the neck by a big fish while swimming off the quay here and died before rescuers brought him to shore.
