THE PEOPLE OF CANADA zens of the Empire. They should be prepared to accept that situation. We pretty much all agree on that. At the same time Canadians must not expect those who are foreign born to give up their sympathies with their respective can't be done.

Children of foreign-born citiattend Canadian schools, being educated at the expense of Canada and imbibing Canadian influences usually become more British than their parents and pretty soon the racial characteristics and prejudices disappear altogether. While they may have a leaning toward the land from which their progenitors came, they accept the conditions under which they were born. In time possibly we shall evolve a distinctive Canadian people with Canadian characteristics although it is more than likely development will be along continental lines. Close association with Americans is likely to keep Canadians racially North American.

BUILDING A NATION We start off then with the raw material for building a nation. We find a large nart of Canada coming from British stock. We find the second largest is French and the French were in Canada before the British. Then we find quite strong Scandinavian, Italian, German, Jugo-Slavian and dozens of other influences in the country and, finally, we have a smattering of Oriental and there is always the native population that was in the country before anyone else. With this on which When people come to Canada I to build we set out to construct they recognize that they are a nation that will be a governcoming to a part of the British | mental unit. It is a great work Empire and when the oecome , and must take a tremendous Canadian citizens they are citi- amount of tact, wisdom and care to bring it about without causing St. Louis any serious rent or explosion. In these groups we have people of many religious persuasions and Most Of Tennis people of no religion. We have hundreds of different political wiews represented. In fact most Was Rained Out mother countries. It simply people have some ideas of their own how the governing of the country should be carried out and what would save the world if it only was given a chance. We find people going up and down the country saying there should be a change and when the change comes we find it is the same old thing under a new name.

The pupils coming from our schools today are probably among the most intelligent in the world. Even if considerable part of their education comes from the comic strips in the newspapers, they think quickly and the way in which they are able to discern is shown in their choice of pictures at the theatres. A few years ago the play shown here at the beginning of this week would have been lost on the majority of the people. Today it is appreciated as seen by the crowds attending.

We find today that people attend meetings for the discussion of more or less abstruse subjects. People dabble in astronomy and many of the other sciences and arts. We are hoping that before long they will learn to discern whether a panacea is right, just, workable, possible of attainment or possible of attainment without a large amount of bloodshed. We have great hope for the future.
