SPORT CHAT

While play-off positions have now been pretty well established, the National League hockey race is proving an interesting contest right up to the close of the season's schedule, particularly as far as first place honors are concerned. New York Rangers and Boston Bruins being once again tied at the top. The Rangers will have two games this week-end, one at Toronto against the Maple Leafs tonight and the other in Chicago tomorrow evening against the Black Hawks. The Bruins are not scheduled for tonight but will take on the Red Wings on Detroit ice tomorrow night. Tonight's second game will see the cellar teams—New York Americans and Canadiens—clashing at Montreal. Tomorrow night the Canadiens and Americans will meet again at New York.
