RED CROSS HELPERS

An S.O.S. has been sent out by the Red Cross Society asking for more knitted and other goods for the soldiers. Evidently they expect the Canadian forces to be in France soon taking part in the big push and there will be need of socks and other articles which the Red Cross supplies.

Those who cannot work at the Red Cross rooms in the City Hall can do the work at home. Already there has been a ready response to the appeal but more might help, it is suggested.

ALLIES BOUND TO WIN

It is reported that there is an opinion held in some quarters in Prince Rupert that the German army is bound to win in the present war. Those who hold that opinion evidently are not acquainted with the British and French character. They base their opinions only on what was done in Poland, Norway and other countries. So far the British and French have not been beaten anywhere. They have suffered a setback in Belgium through the defection of the Belgian king but that is not important. The British and French are far superior in the air to the Germans and it is not necessary to even discuss the superiority at sea. It is so self-evident. On land they have been forced back by numerical superiority and lack of mechanized equipment. This is rapidly being remedied and then we shall see what we shall see.

SEARCHING OF HEART

There seems to be much searching of heart among the people and criticism of leaders. Possibly some leaders have deserved even more criticism than they have received while others have deserved no criticism. We are apt to jump at conclusions at a time like this.

After twenty years of disarmament it is difficult for any nation to get to such a warlike footing that it can compete in arms with a nation that has studied and lived with the prospect of fighting for a quarter of a century. All the best minds of Germany have been turning their minds to military strategy. The mechanics of the country, the chemists, the aeronautic experts, the strategists, all have had their minds on destruction while the British countries including Canada have been thinking of producing and improving conditions. It must be expected that, with all this concentrated effort on the part of the enemy, he is temporarily able at least, to push the French and British back by means of his destructive engines of war.

INDUSTRY HEAD VIEWS ALLIES' ECONOMIC GAIN IN EUROPEAN CONFLICT

collective development and of national prosperity."

Mr. Turnbull reviewed at some length the contribution which so far the great national production departments, agriculture, mining, lumbering, fishing and manufacturing, had been making to the war effort of Canada and the allies, laying particular emphasis on the important part played by agriculture. By recalling some of the remarkable achievements of 1944-45 he indicated the potentialities of the greater and stouter industrial fabric of today.

To Increase Output

"Up to the present," he pointed out, "the greater part of the additional production of supplies in Canada, arising out of war conditions, consists of food, timber, minerals and equipment for the troops—such as uniforms, messengers, blankets, boots and building material for living quarters. A limited amount of work has been available up to date for the engineering and machinery shops, which make what are technically called munitions, such as shells, small arms ammunition, guns and mechanical equipment. Some of these munitions orders for such products have been placed and surveys and plans are being made to increase the output."

"The increased production resulting from the war, the fortunate circumstance that the British Navy is providing the necessary protection to permit the continuation of overseas export trade, the initiative and energy of Canadian producers and exporters, the increased buying power in Canada provided by these economic factors, and the normal requirements of the civilian population, have stimulated all departments of production in Canada and have provided much additional employment since the outbreak of war."

Touching briefly on the financial situation, Mr. Turnbull declared that Canada's financial system was proving a valuable factor in the economic struggle. Tribute was paid to the industry, self-denial and thrift of the Canadian people, who had provided, through an accumulation of savings, the funds so needed in the present emergency. With these resources the government and private institutions could finance war and civil efforts on sound principles, avoiding inflation and other dangerous expedients which, in the end, destroyed credit, out-of-pocket savings, and discouraged individual enterprise.

He stressed the importance of the work being done by the Foreign Exchange Control Board in ensuring that ample supplies of United States dollars were available for the necessary purchases in that country and in the connection urged Canadians to do everything possible to increase exports to the United States and to attract United States tourists to Canada.

In discussing export trade, which was experiencing important changes in direction, character and volume as a result of the war, Mr. Turnbull paid a strong tribute to the invaluable service of the British Navy. It was only because the Navy controlled the seas that shipments of Canadian products reached safely at destinations all around the world, he declared.

Increased Costs

Pointing out that the tendency of prices was upward under war conditions, Mr. Turnbull felt that it was a reasonable plan to insist in the national war effort and to provide manufactured goods to the civil population at moderate prices should be the foundation of industrial policy during the war. He expressed the hope that, as a result of the measures put into effect in the present war, the rise of costs and prices would not be so great and the inevitable post-war decline would be less.

"One of the disturbing causes of the rapid rise of prices in wartime is the artificially stimulated consumer demand resulting from the greatly increased volume of wages paid," he declared. "To the extent that wage and salary earners and the public generally can be encouraged to save during the war, and consumer demand will be curtailed and purchasing power will be kept in reserve for the post-war period when it will be badly needed."

Mr. Turnbull warned his hearers to be on guard against enemy propaganda. Their assets would be something worth while to break the spirit of the Canadian people and to diminish their war efforts. He hoped that everything possible should be done to emphasize their role in the war effort and to give the people a sense of direction and co-operation among all classes.

Mr. Turnbull deprecated pessimistic statements in regard to the future and extent of the ill which might be feared during the post-war period. History showed that other periods of suffering followed when recovery always came. The nation's present task was to get through the war and achieve victory. The next task would be to rebuild the country to cope with the problems and to deal with the problems of that period when they arise, as well as it could be in the meantime.

STARS TRY MATERNITY

Canadian - Born Norma Shearer Even Discusses Child Guidance

HOLLYWOOD, May 30. (CP)—It's no easy matter, filmland's acting mothers agree, to raise a child but it can be done—and successfully.

Only a few actresses have raised the temporary retirement necessary to combine motherhood with a career. For one thing, the pursuit of screen stardom is in itself a full-time job.

Those who have undertaken the task include such top-canaries as the Montreal-born Norma Shearer, Maureen O'Sullivan, Marlene Dietrich, Margaret Sullivan, Virginia Bruce, Lene Harvey and the three Deans—Bentley, Blondell and Davis.

For example, Miss Shearer's few pictures allow her considerable time returned here on Harold A. Clark, who drove to Kitchikan, five. When she is working, all her available spare time is his and she often them. She has taught both to swim and swim with them in the pool at their home.

She sends Irving to public school, where Katharine will follow in a year. She attends parent-teacher association meetings every week, at least one brought up the matter of child guidance.

Norma joined in the discussion and talked at length on how she kept her out of mischief. On leaving the building she noticed in the center of the schoolyard a cloud of dust from which flying came and disappeared occasionally.

One of her companions asked, "Don't that bring?"

"It was with a black and tipped shirt."

"Gosh, mother," he complained in the end him away. "I might have had him in another minute."

Timely Recipes

MAKING PASTRY

The pies that mother used to make were probably made with pastry in which butter and lard were the shortening used. A combination of these two gives excellent results, the butter providing both flavor and color, while the lard assures tender crust.

1 cup pastry flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup lard
About 1/2 cup cold water
Sift flour and salt. Cut in shortening with two knives or pastry blender. Moisten with cold water, adding just enough water to combine ingredients. Pat into shape. Chill thoroughly before rolling. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees F.). Makes 1 single crust.
