You Should See 'Convoy'

Graphic Naval Picture is Worthy of Unqualified Recommendation

"Convoy," which opened last night at the Capitol Theatre, is the most graphic picture based on the present war, which has yet made its appearance. This is no overstatement. It is a picture that should most certainly be seen by all. This is written specially to convey that recommendation. There will be the opportunity when the picture is repeated tonight and tomorrow.

"Convoy" is essentially a British Navy action picture. The main theme is encounter between a British convoy and a bristling, formidable Nazi pocket battleship. It gives ample scope to depict that dogged courage and grim tenacity, even against tremendous odds, which is so essentially British. It is a great tonic for spirits that might be inclined to waver.

The popular Clive Brook as the naval officer in charge is the very personification of British naval spirit.

There is no hesitation in giving an unqualified personal recommendation to "Convoy." To repeat, it really should be seen.—G.A.H.
