The dark sky and slight by Magistrate McClymont in city mist gave the whole an unreal, theatrical effect. In five minutes arrived in the city from Stewart fined $5, with three days' option, for all motion in the street seemed to have ceased. Not a sound to break the stillness except the soft paddling of a dog as it slipped back into the building.

"You must go down, mademoiselle," said the chief.

In the basement only the corridors with their heavy cross beams and thick stone roofs were in use. Along each side chairs, boxes and folding canvas stools were in use. A dim electric bulb with a dash of blue on one side gave a ghostly pallor to the faces. Each carried a gasmask across the knees. All were fully dressed with a scarf or hairnet pulled hastily over uncombed hair. Complexions were natural and unaderned.

Over the door a wet blanket against poison gas hung dripping. It did not cover the sides and a draught rushed in, fluttering it merrily. Successive alerts and drenchings had made the wool shrink. "I can't help it." protestled the coincierge to the complaints. "If you want to have it changed take it up with the shelter chief."

Several women took out their knitting - another a book. The men isolated themselves at the end of the corridor (all of them | were elderly) to discuss the last Corp. F. W. B. Boyt, transferred great war. The rest gossiped or,
