How Jim Wilson's Wife got started in Business

JIM WILSON was hard hit by the depression. For several years, he had an uphill fight to support his wife and two children with meagre earnings from odd jobs. His savings disappeared, and he was finally obliged to seek relief.

Early in 1936, Jim secured steady work and promptly began to pay off his accumulated debts. But in less than a year's time, Jim Wilson took pneumonia and died.

Heart-broken, Jim's wife faced the discouraging task of caring for ner family. The future was black. Imagine her surprise, therefore, when she learned that Jim had taken out a $5,000 life insurance policy.

She sat down and wrote cheques until she had wiped off every debt that Jim had piled up. With the balance she started a small business.

Did it work out? It most certainly did. Nearly three years have passed since Jim died, but Mrs. Wilson has been able to provide for her family ever since. And all because of Jim's life insurance.

Every working day, Life Insurance in Canada pays out more than $500,000 to care for families who have lost their breadwinners, or to bring financial security to those whose working days are over.
