Back to God For Strength Is More In British Empire

Taking as his subject "An Acceptable Approach to God," Rev. H. G. Funston, in morning service at First Presbyterian Church Sunday, said that there was a definite movement in the British Empire back towards God for strength in the present time of crisis. He observed that this movement might not yet have made itself evident in this community.

Mr. Funston exhorted the approach of the humble sin-admitting publican rather than that of the self-righteous, haughty Pharisee.

Unless there was a return to God, the world would face not only the ruin of its cities but the breaking up of its homes and families.

Sunday morning there was to have been the monthly parade of the local units to First Presbyterian Church but owing to prevalence of influenza among the troops, it was postponed.
