have ample opportunities of proving that they can wear tweeds and tailor-mades more successfully than anyone else, designers say.

Economy has produced "Country into Town Suits," a plain suit for the country, with a second coat, sometimes fur trimmed, which transforms a country suit into London outfit.

Blouses modelled on military "battle dress" lines are shown with tweed suits.

Practical tailored tweed dresses to wear under fur coats are trimmed with soutache braid on collars and pockets; with petit point embroidery in bright colored wools, or with bead embroidery of the kind that Victorian great aunts worked as covers for cushions and stools, many years ago.
