When Breakfasts Meant Safe Home

Engine Trouble And German Barrage Looked Like End To These Airmen

LONDON, Aug. 29: (CP)—It was tough, going and they nearly crashed but the crew of a Royal Air Force bomber succeeded in bringing their aircraft back to Britain after the port engine failed when they ran into heavy anti-aircraft barrages over Bremen, Germany.

A squadron leader said they dumped all their bombs on the target and turned "with mighty little hope of reaching a friendly shore." They threw out every movable thing except the parachutes and collapsible dinghy. When the other motor acted up while they were only 400 feet above the sea, they chopped the door off in case the plane crashed. However, one motor picked up and they managed to reach a British airport "where we were welcomed with breakfast."
