Another Bureau Proposed - - -

An effort is being made to turn this democracy into a religious liberty. "I like to feel that · bureaucracy. Unfortunately, for some years past there have been men who could not secure work and orames was confident that, with the public works have suffered accordingly. It has been the help of God, history would relooked upon by some as relief work. It is not fair to judge the public works department by the work done with relief! labor. We are not reflecting on many able men who have! from time to time been employed on public works. Usually it has been the custom to place men who were unable to do a good day's work between the capable men with the! idea of stepping them up. Sometimes it had the effect of slowing down the whole gang.

If a highway commission is employed this below par relief labor will have to be employed somewhere so there will be no real saving.

Political Aspect - - -

Under the present system the money voted for the highways is apportioned among the political constituencies according to their needs. If a commission were appointed, it is presumed that this appointment would be set aside and, as the commission would be largely representative of the big centres, the money would be spent to provide fine automobile roads for the benefit of the big centres. Districts like those of northern British Columbia would find themselves neglected.

As a matter of fact, the appointment of a commission presumes the spending of more money on the highways and this would mean higher taxation. Suppose a commission of three men were appointed. They would if they or $15,000 for the three. They would still need the same or F For Ladies and Gentlemen's similar local engineers and road foremen and there is no TAILORING M. T. The Dress- By Your Own Cloth present heads would still be needed to check up on the commission.

The people choose a certain group to handle the affairs of the province. They hold them responsible for the conduct of affairs. They would not be responsible if the work were done by an independent commission.

At one time the Liberal Party adopted the highway commission idea as its policy. When they came to implement this policy they discovered difficulties which had not been evident when discussing the theory of the policy. Wisely they decided to abandon it.
