Death of British Golfer Recalls Great Career On the Links

LONDON, January 31 (C P) — The Empire lost one of its greatest golfers when John Ball died. Ball, whose record of winning eight British amateur titles stands unchallenged, was a born golfer.

He made his first appearance in an open championship while still in his teens and started the golfing world by finishing sixth, eight strokes behind the winner. He won both the British open and amateur in 1890, a feat not equalled until R. T. (Bobby) Jones did it 10 years ago.

Ball won 99 matches in amateur championships and his final appearance in championship play came in 1927 when he was beaten in the second round after drawing a bye in the first.

Man in the Moon

I'm looking for a ghost writer for this column. You know what I mean. I want a person who can write jokes by the dozen for which I get the credit. He must not criticize or hurt anyone's feelings but make them laugh loud and long. In order to qualify it is necessary to serve a year's apprenticeship without pay.

A woman purchasing war savings certificates in Edinburgh told the clerk: "I've been saving this money to divorce my husband but I can stand him better than I can Hitler."

Hitler was playing bridge with Goering, Goebbels and von Brauchitsch. Goering called "Two hearts," Goebbels "Two no trumps," von Brauchitsch "Three spades" and Hitler "One club." Whereupon Goering, Goebbels and von Brauchitsch cried, "Pass . . . Pass . . . Pass . . ."

Willkie seems to have had a royal time in England but he will likely get in wrong with Lindbergh and Kennedy and the rest of the pro-Germans.

Japan is evidently trying to frighten the United States into a position of strict neutrality. Some other tune will have to be played if this is to be done. Americans may possibly be fooled or cajoled but never frightened.

When asked why the British did not bomb civilians in Germany in order to give the people there a taste of their own medicine, Prime Minister Churchill is reported to have replied: "It would be nice to give the people of Germany a taste of what we are getting but business before pleasure."

Heaven will be all right if some of the jolly good fellows I have known happen to be there to cheer us up on rainy days.

I remember reading that each sect catches a certain sized person. What is your size?

What is the use of having a supply of raw oysters, of sweet potatoes, of artichokes, of sourkraut, of dill pickles, of ripe medlars and of all bran if you have no taste for anything but beef steak and onions?

There are said to be numbers of lost souls in hell but I have known many a seemingly good man lost in a garden of roses.

The smallest and meanest man in Prince Rupert is the one who will discover only too late that he did nothing to help win the war.

When Hitler and Mussolini met recently they discussed their chances of success. Said Il Duce: "I fear that I am licked. I have almost lost my African Empire and my people have lost their faith in me. There is nothing else to lose." In reply the Fuehrer replied: "I had nothing to start with so have nothing to lose. If I win, I win everything. If I lose I become just another lost soul. Had it not been for those blasted British I should have conquered the world, even Russia. In the meantime I am having a great time bombing women and children and destroying ancient relics."

The other day I was asked if I was not worried about the future. Why should I be worried? Experience has taught me that none of the things about which I ever worried in the past have come to pass. Worries are all in the imagination.

Two pigs met at the trough and one said to the other "After me, my dear Adolf." "Not so," replied the other, "you might muss things too much. Let me get my nose in first and if there is any swill left you may play around in it. I'll sit around and watch and finish the job if necessary."

"Eavesdropping again," said Adam, as his wife fell out of a tree.

The junior partner was interviewing a very pretty girl who had applied for a position. The senior partner came in and, after inspecting the vision, called the other member of the firm aside and whispered: "I'd hire her."

"I have."

"Can she take dictation?"

"We'll find that out later," said the junior partner, "I didn't want any obstacles to crop up."

Blessed is the gossip. She will have this to her credit that she has so greatly entertained people with mean talk that they have forgotten to commit any mean acts.

If the stream of public opinion continues to flow sufficiently far it will eventually purify itself. In that thought is the hope of democracy.

Portland Smamps Seattle In Puck Game Last Night

PORTLAND, Jan. 31 (CP)—Portland Buckaroos swamped the Seattle Olympics by a score of 6 to 1 in last night's Pacific Coast Hockey League game. The Bucs moved into third place, the Olympics being relegated to the cellar.

The league standing to date:

Sport Briefs

Daniel E. O'Sullivan, 82, is relinquishing active management of Churchill Downs, the rambling old racing plant that has been home to the Kentucky Derby 65 years. And with him—even though "Colonel" Dan isn't going to leave the desk where he has worked for years in a simple, grey-walled office under the Downs stands—is going a strange era in the colorful history of the famous track. It has been an era of horse-racing publicity written in Colonel Dan's flowing lyrical prose, and sometimes in poetry. The colonel remarked: "Any Irishman who couldn't write poetry about a pretty girl or a thoroughbred horse ought to be chloroformed." It has been an era, too, of bigger purses, bigger stands, bigger crowds, bigger bets, bigger hot dogs—everything bigger, louder, faster, sleeker. It brought the mint julep at a dollar a throw and take the cup home as a souvenir; an era that brought a private "Millionaire's Room" in the Downs clubhouse and 50-cent bleachers on the backstretch.

Colonel Dan, now special assistant to Matt Winn, Downs boss, was resident manager of the Downs for nearly 20 years. He had three careers before he went to work for Winn, then and now head of Churchill Downs and affiliated tracks. He had been a newspaper editor, a lawyer, a politician-public officer. He had a reputation as a hard-hitter with a pen. And when Winn hired him, it was to write of the Derby. Colonel Dan sang of the Derby in poems, in letters, in slick-paper brochures. But for what the Derby has become, Dan tips his hat to Winn. He takes no credit for the public recognition that helped boost the race's added worth from $30,000 in 1920 to $50,000 in 1921 and on up to $75,000 last year. The new era at the Downs has brought a former sports writer as publicity man and appointment of a younger man as resident manager. The new era has come, but Colonel Dan hasn't gone. He's still at the little brown desk.
