Australian Police Pay Visit To Papua and Meet With Very Little Resistance From Natives

Penetrate Hitherto Unknown Interior But Find It Much Like Other Neighboring Districts-Curious Customs of Natives.

SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 5:-The unknown heart of Australia's island territory, Papua, at one time the E inspiration for many fantastic stories, is unknown no longer. White men have been there, proved the stories ? fables, and withdrawn for the time being at least, leaving the heart to beat on in its own primitive rhythm. The s fables said that the area was inhabited by a new white race, gold steeply into a gorge. Now the police camp has been natives were very friendly and everybody was happy."

Later the party came on some workings at the head of a creek: "Had we not known Europeans had never been there we would have taken it for the work of a European miner. Great rocks had been moved and piled up to throw the stream in a different direction and farther on was a race for taking the water away from garden land. The natives said they had been mining for red ochre for painting their bodies and shields but we wondered if they had been digging for flint." When approaching a cluster of hamlets, each with neat green lawns surrounded by casuarina trees, a "lot of them charged down behind us waving their stone axes, bows and arrows, and yodeling. We gave them a dmonstration of rifle shooting and this calmed them down. We got them to show us their shooting, but they couldn't hit a piece of wood 15 paces

Rearguard Attack

Trouble occurred when the party left this village the following morning, for the natives attempted an attack on the rearguard when it was crossing a creek.

"I was in the middle of the creek," says the report of the officer in charge. "A youth rushed at me and I knocked him over; with a jab in the stomach. I leard a warning shout and an arrow touched my hat. Immediately above me on the bank was; a man with his bow drawn fully taking aim at me. I flung my rifle to my shoulder, hesitated a moment to give him an opportunity to withdraw, but he didn't, and I fired, hitting him in the chest. He fell over and the other natives retreated."

Shell currency in the quantities in which the party carried it evidently impressed the natives, for at another village: "Men gradually came in. They asked me to see the shell and there were exclamations when they looked into the trade box. Everyone ejaculated 'Eh!' three times in unison on a low note and then ended with 'Ah!' three times on a higher note." .

Scenery is tersely dealt with: "We came to a garden on a spur where we looked down steemly to the Nabi River nearly 1000 feet below. Across the stream were grass covered slopes dropping
