The skinned sides were then brined in saturated salt brine for 30 minutes, the brine being agitated gently from time to time. On removal from the brine the sides were drained merely for a period sufficient to allow the excess of brine to run off and then spread on wire screen trays (1/2" mesh) skinned side down. The draining can be carried out on the wire trays themselves

The trays of fish were then placed in a type "B" controlled smokehouse as developed by the Atlantic Fisheries Experimental Station and described in Progress Reports (Atlantic) No. 19, May, 1937. Smoking proceeded for 16 hours at a smokehouse temperature of 90 degrees F. No prelim-
