Air Raid Victim Aided by Queen's Fund

Miss Edith Curry was safe in a public shelter when a boarb came crashing down upon the rooming house in New Cavendish Street, London W.1, in which she lived in a small room. Sixtythree years of age, she lives on a pension of less than five dollars a week, which she supplements by doing dressmaking. Coming out of the shelter on the morning after the raid, she found that the rooming house had been completely destroyed, and she was left with nothing but the clothes she was wearing and the few bedclothes she had taken into the shelter.

Miss Curry was given some help by the Covernment Assistance Board of her borough, but although the Government aid was sufficient for her to buy a few pieces of furniture for the new living quarters with which she was provided and some new clothes, she was unable to replace her most valued possession - her sewing machine. But then the Lord Mayor's National Air Raid Distress Fund stepped in and made sure that she would not be without the means of supplementing her meagre pension. From money donated to the Queen's Canadian Fund a brand new machine was bought for Miss Curry, and here she is seen working at it.

When a representative of the Queen's Canadian Fund called on Miss Curry the new machine had just been moved in and she made no attempt to conceal her pride of possession. "I don't know what I'd have done without a machine," she said. "Say thank you to your kind Canadians for me, will you, please?"

More Hard Thinking And Tolerant Discussion Urged By Rotary Speaker

Rev. J. A. Donnell, pastor of First United Church, in an address to the Prince Rupert Rotary Club yesterday, urged that there more hard thinking and tolerant discussion, particularly amon businessmen. In these busy days there was so little time for real hard thinking. In many cases it was found that the workers did more thinking than the business-

The speaker said it was his business to sell religion. That did not mean the Golden Rule. The Golden Rule was not religion. He explained that his conception of religion was a consciousness of God in the working out of the plan of the universe. The consciousness of God was the important thing.

The lack of tolerant discussion was one of the faults of the cen-
