Bravest Deed Was By Mother

Her Daughter Buried In Ruins Woman Operator Carried On As Usual

LEEDS, Eng., June 14: (CP) — This is the story of what Lady Bonham-Carter, a Paddington air raid warden, called "the bravest I saw in a recent air raid."

Speaking at a meeting in Leeds, she said "It was the action of a woman colleague in charge of the telephone at our wardens' post."

"Messages were streaming in for her to transmit and among them came a message that her own daughter was buried in the ruins of a house. Throughout that night, for seven long hours, she carried on, like stone, patiently and accurately transmitting the messages that came through to her. There is no medal struck worthy of deeds like these."

The woman mentioned by Lady Bonham-Carter was Mrs. Florence Emanuel. "She displayed the utmost bravery that night and we shall never forget her courage and fortitude," said a fellow-worker at the post.

But there is a happy ending to the story. The daughter was rescued from the wrecked house, where she was pinned down by a heavy water tank and debris, and taken to the hospital. Her injuries were not as severe as feared at first and she is making a good recovery.

Banks Need Women As Call-Ups Come

Offices Releasing More Of Their Men For Fighting Services

LONDON, June 14: (CP)—Thousands of women will be needed by the banks soon to replace men called up for military service during the summer months.

When war started the banks lost many of their younger men who were members of Territorial units or various service reserves. Others were later called up or volunteered. A considerable number of these men were replaced by women.

Now, under the revised schedule of reserved occupations many more men will be de-reserved. It is expected that by the end of the summer at least 6,000 men will be taken in this way—approximately one-tenth of the normal peacetime strength of the banks' staffs. By the fall, when further de-reservations operate, another 1,500 may be called up.
