In addition to becoming proficient motorcyclists, the 1,000 men at the training centre must be able to drive the vehicles of the arm of the service to which they belong. This means that a tank officer must be able to handle the controls just as efficiently as the driver.

Col. Whitelaw said the men sent to the training centre after being selected as likely officer material were given a thorough training and the results were observed by instructors. The plan is that Canadlian officers will be able to do everycommand in battle.
