Defining War Aims - - -

There is still talk of the British Empire defining her! war aims. Those who urge this policy usually are those' who have, to say the least, been lukewarm in their war effort. Prime Minister Churchill declares his war aim is to defeat the Nazis and that is as far as he is willing to go at present.

This move to have the war aims defined is an effort, on the part of the Nazis to divide the British just when they need greater solidification. We all know that Prime Minister Churchill is President of the British Conservatives and that Ernest Beven is a labor leader. To make a definite pronouncement in regard to what is to happen, after the war might tend to make these groups suspicious Now employed (or married women) Rangers of each other just at a time when the greatest undivided war effort is necessary. We can fight out the post-war aims after the war is won. The first thing to do is to down; Hitlerism and Mussolinism. When that is completely accomplished there will be a new fight to establish a better democracy. That is really the continuation of an old struggle and will be carried on for many years after the passing of Nazism or Fascism.

Gross Foolishness - - -

Up to the time when France collapsed Italy was building up her merchant marine, constructing ships and improving her world condition. Her territories were res-1 pected and she bid fair to emerge from the period of NOW IS THE TIME TO GET A struggle much stronger than when it commenced. Urged by Germany she thought she saw a chance to extend her empire at the expense of Britain, possibly without even striking a blow, for it seemed to her that her old ally was about to fall.

The result is that she has lost her African Empire, her merchant marine, most of her navy and all her world prestige. If Germany should win she becomes a vassal state. Her only hope is that Britain may be magnanimous when FOR the war is over. She will be in a much better position if Britain wins than if Germany should win.
