In a statement of policy he declared that the first duty should be to co-operate fully with the Dominion government in the war effort and, second, to give consideration to measures to look after post-war problems such as the care of returned soldiers. He advocated practical measures to aid agriculture which he declared, in agreement with the Sirois report, was the basic industry of the province. He urged decentralization of industry with the building up of industrial centres surrounded by agricultural communities. British olumbia could not, he declared, e great and permanently prosper-
