DEER ON ISLANDS

Capt. Harry Nedden Tells Vancouver Newspaperman How They Got There.

Plenty of fat venison is coming out of Queen Charlotte Islands this year, and more will come in future seasons, now that the sportmen have discovered the "happy hunting ground."

Few sportsmen know that the Queen Charlottes were once barre nof deer, and that the present populous deer citizenry are descendants of a mainland family that originated in the public park at New Westminster. N

Captain H. E. (Harry) Nedden, soon to retire as commodore shipmaster of the Canadian National Steamships fleet, is authority for the statement that the island was stocked from Fraser River deer.

About 26 years ago a family of deer was sent to the island from the mainland, on board the company steamer Prince Albert, Captain C. W. Wearmouth. They vanished. Perhaps the ndians cleaned them up at once.

Then, in 1916, five does and one buck from a park at New Westminster were taken on board the Albert, and housed in crates on deck.

"They didn't stay long in the crates," states Captain Nedden. "They were great pets. The sailors fed them carrots and apples, and soon they had the run of the deck.

"The animals were put ashore at Massett village, but that was not a success. They were too friendly, and the villagers' gardens were too tempting. It was decided to place them in the wilderness across the wide inlet. The five does were caught and so transported, but the buck escaped. Or rather, he evaded captors.

"He scored to hide. Every time we entered the port and blew a whistle we would hear a clatter of hard hoofs beating a tatoo on the planks of the wharf. It was the buck coming down to get his carrots!"

Finally, one day, when a housewife was changing clothes in her back yard, she found the buck enjoying her garden. She startled him by throwing her clothes basket. He replied by butting her down, in a most undignified manner. A man happened along with a rope. He dropped it on the playful deer, and then the buck was shipped across to the up-to-them Adamless deer Eden across the inlet.

That was 25 years ago. Today there are countless deer on the north sland of the Queen Charlotte group.

Harbor Master Situation Here

Capt. Brown Relinquishes Duties and Efforts Being Made to Obtain Permanent Successor.

Capt. S. C. Brown of Vancouver, having retired from the position because the remuneration was not adequate, the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce was advised last night by the director of marine services that S. H. Davis, agent of the marine department, was carrying on temporarily as harbor master here while efforts were being made to obtain a permanent shipping master and surveyor of tonnage for Prince Rupert.

The harbor master situation in Prince Rupert was brought to a head recently when complaints were made by the Royal Canadian Air Force of float material in Prince Rupert Harbor which presented a menace to aircraft. Steps were being taken to clear this up. James Clark, superintendent of Canadian National Railways, wrote to say that railway employees were being strictly instructed to discontinue throwing of debris into the harbor and the dry dock had also been communicated with.
